Roosevelt's Own Story:

Pleaded for Peace To World Nations

Chief Executive Sought Disarmament, End of Economic Chaos

ARTICLE No. 7

On Disarmament and Peace

A Comment of Franklin D. Roosevelt from His Forthcoming Books

Editor's Introductory Note

(The authority vested in the Presidency of the United States makes its incumbent, during his elected term, one of the world's most powerful rulers. As such, Mr. Roosevelt perforce played an important role in the great drama of world diplomacy.

(His first lines in the play were spoken only two months after taking office in Washington, on May 16, 1933, when he appealed to the nations of the world for peace by disarmament and for the end of economic chaos. His appeal was addressed directly to the reigning sovereigns or chief executives of 42 countries.

("I was impelled to this action," the President wrote to Congress, "because it has become increasingly evident that the assurance of world political and economic peace and stability is threatened by selfish and short-sighted policies, actions and threats of actions."

This appeal to the heads of the governments of the world is of special importance in view of subsequent events. Two factors made it necessary in 1933. The first was the possibility that something might yet be saved from the disarmament conference which had been meeting in Geneva since 1932. The second was the impending economic conference, to be held in London the following month.

International relationships in Europe had been going from bad to worse for four years. Arma-

ROME, March 30 (INS)—The Fascist philosophy of war—one of preparedness, ruthlessness and overwhelming speed—was expounded to the Italian Senate today in the first speech Premier Mussolini has made before that body in 15 years.

In a 40-minute survey of Italian armed might, which included the boast that Fascism today has no less than nine million men to throw into the field, Il Duce gave his sanction to demoralization of civilian populations by aerial bombardments.

He warned the world Italy was ready to fight and that his goal was to realize Napoleon's prophesy that "these Italians will one day be the first soldiers in the world."

Foreign observers were amazed by Mussolini's failure to make a

7 Charges Hurled at Judge Stone

Verbal Clash Marks Start of Hearing On Impeachment

Judge Arthur P. Stone today was charged with responsibility for the two New Hampshire sex murders committed by Howard E. Long.

The allegation was lodged by Representative Roland D. Sawyer of Ware as the joint legislative rules committee began hearings at the State House on a resolution to impeach the East Cambridge jurist for alleged "misconduct and maladministration of his office."

Author of the resolution, Representative Sawyer flayed the Middlesex County judge in a scathing indictment that was met by vigorous rebuttal from former Middlesex Prosecutor Robert T. Bushnell, counsel to the accused justice.

Shouting at each other in a manner that threatened to upset the hearing, Bushnell and Sawyer disputed over the seven specific charges lodged against Judge Stone by the Ware legislator-minister.

Sawyer accused Judge Stone of concealing vital information from Governor Hurley and of betraying the trust vested in him by state officials.

He further charged unethical conduct in alleging that Judge Stone had borrowed $2000 from the late Patrick J. Delaney, former member of the Cambridge City Council, who practiced before him.

It was over this last accusation that the bitter conflict on the committee floor arose.

Robs Wellesley Agent of $100

Joshiah Whitney, 64-year-old station agent for the Boston & Albany Railroad at the Wellesley Farms station, was held up and robbed of $100 in railroad and postal funds by a bandit in the station at noon today.

Whitney grappled with the bandit, he told police, but the man slugged him in the mouth with the barrel of a revolver and forced him to open the safe.

The railroad station is also a postal sub-station and the money in the safe included postal receipts.

The robber compelled Whitney to lie down when he was bound with cord and wire.

A woman said she saw the bandit jump into an automobile. Another man was at the wheel, she added.

The governor also sent to the Executive Council for approval the following appointments:

Attorney Patrick J. Reynolds, 46, of Lowell, as justice of Lowell district court to fill the seven-months vacancy created by the resignation of Judge Frederic C. Fisher.

Attorney James H. Flanagan, 44, of Sturges road, West Roxbury, as a non-salaried member of the Boston Finance Commission, filling the post vacated by the resignation of E. Mark Sullivan.

Judge Fisher resigned last September, the first Massachusetts jurist to take advantage of the retirement act passed by the Legislature. He was 81 at the time.

Reynolds has been practicing law in Lowell since 1916. He is a close friend of Judge Joseph A. Monahan of Middlesex probate court.

Snell Blocks 2d Dictator Bill Rush

WASHINGTON, March 30 (INS) — Cracking the party whip, the House reorganization committee today rode over minority opposition to report the government reorganization bill formally. The vote was 7 to 2.

By exactly the same vote, with two Republicans protesting, the committee refused to hold public hearings on the four House bills which were wrapped into one and substituted for the Byrnes bill passed by the Senate.

Committee Chairman Cochran (D.) of Missouri, was instructed to seek unanimous House consent to limit debate to six hours, starting tomorrow.

SNELL BLOCKS HASTE

He also was authorized to request the House to convene an hour earlier tomorrow and to order the bill read by title only, so that it can be pushed to final passage by Friday or Saturday.

But Representative Snell of New York, Republican leader, blocked both Cochran's request that the House convene an hour earlier tomorrow and that debate be fixed at six hours.

"A measure so affecting the fundamentals of our government should not be rushed," said Snell. "I think the purpose is to pass the bill before the people find out all about it."

Lockjaw Kills 6, Serum Hunted

ORLANDO, Fla., March 30 (INS)—With six persons dead from lockjaw here within 24 hours, authorities today launched a frantic search for the last remaining bottle of a serum believed to contain the death-dealing tetanus microbes.

All victims of the disease only recently had received injections of the serum, used in the treatment of advanced cases of cancer, it was announced by Justice of the Peace E. G. Duckworth.

The victims were all middle-aged and elderly women, Justice Duckworth said. The first death occurred at 9 p. m. last night, and the sixth victim died at 10:18 a. m. today.

Tornado Injures 50 in Kansas

COLUMBUS, Kan., March 30 (AP)—A tornado tore through this town of 3300 near noon today, twisting apart a school and 30 other buildings and injuring an estimated 50 persons, many of them children.

The lashing storm was one of a series which dipped into Arkansas, Oklahoma, Missouri and Kansas.

Three were reported killed in Boone county, Missouri. A woman was killed at Republican, Arkansas. Thirty school pupils barely escaped injury near Chetopa, Kan.

Note Lists Property Seizures

WASHINGTON, March 30 (INS) — The American government today demanded Mexico pay promptly and adequately for expropriation of U. S.-owned oil properties.

The action carried an added stinger in the form of a reminder that the United States also expects Mexico to pay for considerable farm property owned by Americans taken over by the Mexican government during the past several years.

A statement by Secretary of State Hull made the situation clear. Hull frankly conceded the right of Mexico to expropriate property within its boundaries, and then called attention sharply to the fact that when this is done, indemnification must be made.

The statement revealed that, while the United States does not immediately contemplate putting further pressure on Mexico, every diplomatic effort possible is being made to ascertain just how and when Mexico intends to pay for her expropriation actions.

HULL'S STATEMENT

The secretary, in issuing his statement, requested correspondents to carry it as a whole and not piecemeal. He said:

"During the past few years the Mexican government, in pursuance of its national policy, has expropriated and is continuing to expropriate the properties of citizens of other countries in Mexico and of its own citizens. Among these have been many hundreds of farms and other properties of American citizens.

"Many of our nationals have invested their savings in these properties, have undertaken im-

Dictator Bill Protests To Congress Continue

Weeks Says Strong Fight Will Kill Measure

Public officials, business leaders and private citizens of Massachusetts continued today a telegraphic bombardment on Washington protesting against passage of the reorganization bill in the House.

Spurring on the attack was Sinclair Weeks, chairman of the Republican state committee, who urged non-partisan action in blocking the so-called Dictator bill.

CITES DEFEAT

The Massachusetts leader cited the defeat of the Supreme Court reorganization bill as an example of what concerted and repeated opposition can accomplish. Chairman Weeks said:

"The fate of this measure now rests with a House that is already sharply divided against itself. The indignation of the people had an electric effect when it made itself felt in the Senate.

"Although Washington observers predict passage of the bill in the other branch without major amendments, they conceded that the prediction may be upset if there continues to develop the wave of popular opposition such as was manifested over the week-end.

"Let us see to it that the members of Congress realize that citizens of this country, regardless of party, want to halt the march to complete federal centralization.

FIGHT BROUGHT VICTORY

"It was only a militant unremitting fight which checked the President from obtaining from the Senate some of the most radically dangerous demands which he made. But there remain just as many drastic features which justify uncompromising opposition.

"Let us fight to the finish. It is significant to note that this determination is shared by the same group of Democrats in Congress which so successfully attacked the abortive attempt to suspend constitutional government by enabling the executive to dominate the Supreme Court.

"The President's attempt to grab additional power in his program of creating a one-man government is particularly destructive at this time. The chief concern of everyone else is to provide employment for the jobless and to make steady work for those fortunate enough to hold jobs.

"We all of us agree that there is room for improvement, but not one provision of this legislation will help put men and women to work.

Wire N. E. Congressmen To Kill Dictator Bill

The Byrne's Reorganization Bill, which would authorize the President to reorganize the executive and departmental structure of the Federal Government WITHOUT SUBMITTING HIS PROPOSALS TO CONGRESS, now goes to the House of Representatives after passage by the United States Senate.

This bill, which vitally affects our form of constitutional and representative government and means practically the death of American democracy, should be killed.

The House has the power to perform a distinct public service to the American people whose interests and liberties are vitally concerned.

YOU, as a citizen of the United States, are given one more opportunity to see to it that this bill does not pass.

Telegraph your congressman IMMEDIATELY, asking him to record himself against the Byrne's Reorganization Bill.

MASSACHUSETTS—Allen T. Treadway, Charles R. Clason, Joseph E. Casey, Pehr G. Holmes, Edith N. Rogers, George J. Bates, Lawrence Connery, Arthur D. Healey, Robert Luce, George H. Tinkham, John W. McCormack, Thomas A. Flaherty, Richard B. Wigglesworth, J. W. Martin, Jr., and Charles L. Gifford.

CONNECTICUT—William M. Citron, Herman P. Kopplemann, William J. Fitzgerald, James A. Shanley, Alfred N. Phillips, Jr., and J. Joseph Smith.

NEW HAMPSHIRE—Arthur B. Jenks and Charles W. Tobey.

Gen. Johnson Says:

OPTIMISM VITAL

U. S. Needs Self-Confidence

By HUGH S. JOHNSON

CINCINNATI, March 30—This piece is written at the Cincinnati home of my old friend and partner, Colonel R. W. Lea. It is a house on a hill overlooking the cut that the Ohio river takes through the plains country hereabouts—a deep broad path of the conquest and exploration of the West.

Hugh S. Johnson

Not very far from here is the town of Chillicothe, the site of an old Shawnee Indian village of the same name. My mother's branch of my own family—the Meads migrating first from Litchfield, Conn., settled there first. Then they floated down this very gateway to the West to what is now Cairo and up the Mississippi and the Illinois to help found, just one hundred years ago, Chillicothe in Illinois.

Not long ago my aunt sent me a chest of drawers from my grandfather's estate that my great-grandfather had made in Chillicothe, Ohio. It must have floated down the very valley upon which I am now looking.

• • •

When that happened, it still wasn't altogether safe to make that journey. Fifty years earlier the greatest struggle of the whites to take the country from the Indians was at its bloodiest peak.

On my table as I write this, is a book discovered last year by my hostess, Patsy Lea, written in 1841 and called, "Cincinnati." It is the earliest real estate booster book I have seen. It need take its hat off to no Los Angeles prospectus of 1928.

After scoffing at the short-sightedness of those who a few years before had boasted that freight would be brought from New Orleans at two cents a pound, that 20 steamboats would serve Louisville, Pittsburgh and Cincinnati and mail reach this town from the Eastern Seaboard in twelve days, it struts:

"These were the visionairies of those days who, but for their saneness in other things and general standing in society, would have been treated with silent contempt, or thought fitted only for strait-jackets.

"Yet how tame and feeble was their highest flight compared with sober realities, not which were left to their children to behold, but which they lived to see extended 10, 20 and 30-fold beyond which they had the sagacity to foresee and the boldness to assert."

• • •

The quaint aspect of the writings of Mr. Charles Cist, the author of all this scorn of timid prophets, is that after he had turned himself loose on a real prospectus of the future of Cincinnati, "a century hence," he fel lbehind the actual performance by roughly 90 per cent.

The thing that appeals to me about all those early American architects was confidence in their country. Half the reason why the country became great was because they believed it would become great.

It has now become the fashion to question whether it is any good at all, and the chief questioner is the President of the United States. That is the principal reason for the present paralysis of progress.

It is a passing pessimistic phase and its chief pessimist will pass with it. It wasn't the patroons who grew fat on fat acres in the Hudson River Valley who made this country. It was the gaunt but eager optimists who moved dangerously down this Ohio River Valley and other routes to the West, who made it.

• • •

It wasn't any political or economic ideas imported from Europe which gave to the common man five to ten times the advantages here that he enjoys elsewhere. It was something that we cooked up ourselves right here on the American Continent.

The greatest need of the moment is to sell America to the Americans in spite of all the camorras of Corcorans and Cohens that may inform the ear of the President of the United States.

The DAILY WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

By DREW PEARSON and ROBERT S. ALLEN

WASHINGTON—The President's tough-talking speech at Gainesville, Ga., grated harshly on the ears of certain elements, but to his close advisers it came like the voices of singing angels.

They had awaited the address with bated breath as an indication of the peerless leader's frame of mind. What they specifically wanted to know was whether he was going to continue taking his base on balls, or was going to step to the plate and hit his way out of the current six months coma of inaction.

So the fighting words at Gainesville pepped them up enormously, and they are now hopeful that he will bestir himself energetically regarding the recession.

For a while the President is pondering the economic problem under the balmy skies of his Warm Springs retreat. But daily it becomes clearer that unless the President acts with the old-time Roosevelt vigor, he may spend his last two years in office as bitterly disliked as the ill-fated Herbert Hoover.

PEOPLE EXPECT MIRACLES—The most important question asked by American business men today is:

"Why doesn't Roosevelt do something to end the recession?"

Having won for himself the reputation of "miracle man," and having been given greater power than any other peace-time President, Roosevelt is paying the penalty.

People remember the decisive way in which he acted during his first term.

Now they are wondering at the reason for the inactivity. And those who are doing the wondering, strangely enough, include some of the closest friends around him. They are just as mystified as his most caustic critics.

ROOSEVELT MYSTERY—Various explanations are put forward by members of the Inner Circle for Roosevelt's six months' inactivity. Most of them are pure speculation, but they include:

He is preoccupied with the sinister international situation.

He wanted Congress to push him into spending more relief and emergency money.

He wanted business men also to push him.

He didn't want to begin a new spending program himself because it would be an admission that the 1936 recovery was built on insecure foundation.

He didn't believe that the recession was going to be serious, thought it would right itself with a little breathing spell to business.

With the exception of the first there is probably some truth in all of these reasons.

There are, in addition, two other factors more complicated to explain but important none the less. One is the fact that this country has been operating on a spending program for years—though we haven't always known it—and Roosevelt is now trying to balance the budget.

Right on the heels of this came the Coolidge bull market when people spent their paper margins—which later vanished into thin air. Then came Roosevelt's spending program, plus the bonus which shot the prosperity index to the skies.

And now, in a few short months, the country is down to almost no spending.

Note—Henry Morgenthau, chief opponent of spending, now seems to have been won over to the idea.

SUDDEN CAUTION—The other important factor is Roosevelt's sudden cautiousness. He is like the men who work on New York skyscrapers. When one of them is killed by a fall, the rule on all high construction is that work stops for the rest of the day.

This vacation is not motivated by fear of carelessness on the part of the surviving workers. Just the opposite—the men become so careful that they lose their sense of balance, their sangfroid, their confidence, and accidents result.

Roosevelt also has become cautious—both tired and cautious. Now he looks carefully before he takes each step.

At any rate, the next few weeks will tell the story. They will determine whether Gainesville was merely a puff, or the opening salvo of a new offensive.

Wagner Rips Dictator Bill

The administration's reorganization bill proposes to confer too great powers on President Roosevelt, Senator Wagner, veteran New York legislator, declares in the accompanying article, explaining his vote against the measure.

By SENATOR ROBERT F. WAGNER

Written expressly for the Boston Evening American

WASHINGTON, March 30 — I voted to recommit the reorganization bill and voted against it upon final passage with considerable regret and only after long deliberation.

With many provisions of the bill I am heartily in accord. This is particularly true of title four, which creates a department of welfare, a reform which I have favored for many years.

My fundamental disagreement arises, first with respect to the provision eliminating the existing bipartisan civil service commission and sustituting a one-man administrator.

I appreciate that there is much to be said for the change from the standpoint of efficiency, and that, in other respects, the bill makes material advancements in the merit system under civil service.

I believe, however, in the maintenance of the bipartisan character of the civil service commission which heads up the administration of civil service laws.

This, in itself, would not have persuaded me to vote against the bill as a whole, were it not for my disagreement with the delegation of authority to the President to reorganize and transfer the agencies and functions of the various departments (other than quasi-judicial agencies), subject only to disapproval by a two-thirds vote of both houses, in the final analysis.

It seems to me that the legislative branches of government should not shirk essential legislative duties because their exercise may be distasteful or may be stalemated in some instances by the opposition of powerful groups.

In this respect, I would not go so far as to require that Congress specifically approve any presidential reorganization order before it could become effective. This would permit important and desirable changes to be negatived by the vote of either House.

To my mind, there would be sufficient legislative check by providing for disapproval of a presidential reorganization order within a stipulated time by a concurrent resolution of both houses.

Stoning Marks Tannery Row In Norwood

Homes of 2 Foremen Under Barrage From Autoists

There was disorder again today in the strike of Winslow Brothers and Smith Company tannery workers, when homes of foremen in Norwood and Walpole were stoned by four men in an automobile.

Two men were arrested yesterday charged with stone throwing outside the tanneries in Davis and Railroad avenues and in Dedham court today their cases were continued for a week.

They are Thomas Donahue of Railroad avenue and Walter Sandall of Fisher street, arrested after a barrage of stones had been laid down on automobiles leaving the plant.

Several men and women office workers were injured and the windows of cars shattered.

Stoned today were the homes of Dennis Higgins in Munroe street, Norwood, and John Fitzpatrick, four miles distant in Walpole.

Several windows were smashed in each house, and as a result of yesterday's stoning, extra police guards were stationed at the tanneries.

No further trouble developed, however, although there were more than 100 strikers picketing the tanneries.

The strike was called as a result of the alleged refusal of the company, of which former Governor Frank G. Allen is chairman of the board, to grant vacations and increased overtime pay.

Kindness of a Revere bartender, who sent them home in a taxi after they stopped at his place for a drink of water, ended a weary journey last night for two missing Lynn girls, police revealed today.

The girls, Hazel Hodgman, 11, and Jennie Ugi, 12, both of Lowell street, Lynn, were reported missing Monday afternoon.

According to Sergeant Asa J. Darsney, the pair walked to Wakefield, in an unsuccessful search for the grandmother of the Ugi girl, and then to Roxbury where they failed to find an aunt of the Hodgson youngster.

The girls said they slept on a piazza Monday night while on their way to Roxbury, the police sergeant said.

Battle Lost, Starts Home

Banished forever from the United tSates on grounds of moral turpitude, Frances McCullough, 19, Brighton High graduate, was deported today to Canada. She refused to explain her re-entry into this country after returning to Canada on completion of school here. Herbert C. Gates, Brighton, was fined $100 in connection with the case.

JANE FITZPATRICK, OF SOUTHBRIDGE

Girls Named For Class Day

Two of Jackson College's most beautiful seniors have been selected by recent balloting to membership on the Class Day Committee. Jane Fitzpatrick of Southbridge and Emily Fedor of Bridgeport, Conn., by popular vote selected as two of the five most beautiful seniors, and Lois O'Brien of West Somerville make up the committee.

Miss Fitzpatrick is Off-Hill representative for the Student Council, treasurer of the senior class, and a pre-medical student. Miss Fedor played tennis as a freshman, was a class representative to the All Around Club in 1936, and a member of the spring formal committee held a weeks ago.

Miss O'Brien has been social chairman of her class for the past three years.

Drummer Bride Won't Battle Annulment

Watertown Musician, Virginia Girl, 15, Regret Elopement

If the elopement-marriage of Frederick A. Morris, Jr., 20, of Watertown, dance band drummer, and his 15-year-old bride, June Burroughs of Norfolk, Va., is annulled, there will be no remarriage in more mature years.

That seemed certain today, according to the statements of the young couple who succumbed to the romanticism of swing music and a North Carolina moon and became man and wife last fall.

Discussing the annulment petition filed by his father, prominent Boston insurance broker, young Morris admitted the "whole affair was a mistake." Asked if he would consider remarrying his bride when he was older, he answered "no."

WON'T CONTEST

The bride, reached at her Norfolk home, had nothing to say about the petition except that she would not contest it.

Morris met his bride while touring the south with a dance orchestra. The wedding knot was tied in South Mills, N. C., by a justice of the peace.

Morris, Sr., declared in his petition, filed in Middlesex court, that both his son and the former Miss Burroughs married without consent of their parents, though both were under age.

"ACTED HASTILY"

At his Lowell road, Watertown, home, where he is spending a two weeks' vacation, Morris, Jr., reluctantly admitted he and his wife had "acted rather hastily."

"Both June and I agree with dad we didn't wait long enough," he said. "I was playing with the band down in North Carolina when we decided to elope. Because of our youth we had to falsify our ages.

"After talking things over with my father the suit for annulment was filed as a solution. June is a fine girl but we both regret our action now."

Rockefeller Secret Told

Reveals Why Middle Name Was Omitted

NEW YORK, March 30 (INS)—Winthrop Rockefeller, son of Multimillionaire John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has no middle name because his mother hates war.

The younger Rockefeller, it was disclosed, related the story to a 10-year-old Pennsylvania "editor," Charles D. "Chuck" Mackey, of Lansdowne, Pa., who interviewed him.

Rockefeller told the youngster, "editor" of the Manor Flash, that he was named for his uncle, Winthrop Aldrich, chairman of the board of the Chase National Bank.

"Then why isn't your name Winthrop Aldrich Rockefeller?" "Chuck" asked.

"My mother wanted to give me that name," Rockefeller replied. "But then she thought about my initials. She couldn't bear to have a son whose initials spelled W A R, so that's the reason I haven't any middle name."

Glasses Don't Hinder Flirts

Styles Now Aid Beauty Optometrists Told

The old theory that "men don't flirt with girls who wear glasses" has been definitely exploded. There are no statistics available to prove it, but the fact remains, according to the optometrists, who are convening at Hotel Statler, that women no longer have any prejudice against glasses.

Dr. Carl A. F. Schroeder, director of the optometric reading clinic, a feature of the conference, said women did have such prejudice until manufacturers of eyeglasses took the beauty angle into consideration and made spectacles to match complexions and contours.

Parents, too, according to Dr. Schroeder, have changed their attitude toward glasses for children, especially since it has been proven that many children who fail in school do so only because of a correctible visual defect.

The session at the convention today was given over to discussions of the remedial reading and its relation to optometry.

Dr. Emmet A. Betts, director of the reading clinic at Pennsylvania State College, stated that children in schools today must read five times as much as in former times, yet less than 25 per cent read efficiently. Many children classified as dull prove to have superior intelligence, but are hampered by their reading disability.

Governor George H. Earle of Pennsylvania motored from the state capital to North Wales, Pa., to consult with Mrs. Irene Laverty concerning the sight of her son, Roger. The three are pictured in the Laverty home. The governor suggests the baby be operated upon in Philadelphia. The mother still insists on the trip to New York and the transplanting of a part of the cornea of one of her eyes in place of Rogers' diseased one.

Governors Aid Fight for Sight

PHILADELPHIA, March 30—Two governors and New York's mayor promised all aid today to save the sight of a child whose mother offered her own eye that he might see like other boys.

Governor George H. Earle, after conferring with the child's parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Laverty of North Wales, asked the help of Governor Lehman of New York to have the boy taken to New York City for an operation by Dr. Ramon Castroviejo.

Governor Lehman, Earle said, suggested that Mayor Fiorello Laguardia of New York could give the necessary aid better than New York State, which has no special hospital facilities.

Victim of Holdup Names Mrs. Freedman Suspect

Two women, one of them tentatively identified as Mrs. Ruth Freedman, long-sought alleged gun girl, today were named as suspects in connection with the holdup of a West Bridgewater mother yesterday.

The victim, Mrs. Mary Washburn of Matfield street, West Bridgewater, told police that the redheaded woman who with the aid of a man companion robbed her of $60 at gun point resembled published descriptions of the Mrs. Freedman who is sought as an accomplice in the Sidney Powers gang's attempted holdup in Stoneham last New Year's eve. Powers was killed in a duel with police.

At the same time, according to police, Mrs. Washburn named a married woman, a neighbor of hers some years ago, as her possible assailant. State and Bridgewater police came to Boston today to seek this woman.

The bandit couple played upon Mrs. Washburn's mother love in the robbery, threatening to kill her year-old daughter if she did not hand over her money. The holdup took place in front of her home. Mrs. Freedman is said to have dyed her blonde hair red.

First Alcatraz Pardon Is Won By 'Hard Luck'

He Proves Confession Was False, But Must Serve Jail Term

WASHINGTON, March 30 (AP)—Rollie (Hardrock Roy) Rector, who lied to get a federal prison term and then was sent to rock-bound Alcatraz island, won a full presidential pardon today.

President Roosevelt, the Justice Department announced, acted on Hardrock Roy's substantiated assertion that he already was in jail at the time of the St. Joe (Texas) bank robbery for which Hardrock got 20 years.

He was tired of the Paducah, Tex., jail, where he was confined on a robbery charge, he said, when he "confessed" in 1935 to the St. Joe robbery and kidnaping.

He had heard the Atlanta Federal Penitentiary was "soft," and he hoped to be sent there. He hadn't even thought of Alcatraz.

The fact that he was already in jail at the time of the St. Joe banditry did not come up when he pleaded guilty in federal court, and Hardrock was sentenced—to this country's Devil Island.

Hardrock's hard luck didn't stop there. When he found Alcatraz less to his liking than the Paducah jail, he was unable at first to prove that he was behind bars at the time of the federal bank robbery.

The jail had been hit by a tornado and its records blown away.

Then somebody remembered—maybe it was the bride that Hardrock was married while serving that particular jail term. Marriage license records showed his wedding took place while he was in the custody of a turnkey.

Hardrock Roy cannot, however, go back to the bride who saved him from 18 years more at Alcatraz. He was shipped from the federal penitentiary in San Francisco Bay to El Paso, Tex., where he must finish out that old state robbery term.

There is one bright spot in Hardrock's story.

He was the first Alcatraz inmate to win a pardon.

Ban Paying Of Millen Insurance

Mrs. Carolyn Millen

MURTON MILLEN

On February 5, 1934, three days after the Needham bank murders for which he and two companions later were electrocuted, Murton Millen paid the first premium on a $5000 life insurance policy.

Today, the Massachusetts Supreme Court told Millen's mother, Mrs. Carolyn Millen of Lawrence street, Roxbury, named as beneficiary in the policy, that she can't collect.

The "bald question," the court ruled, is "whether a life insurance policy is a binding contract to insure against a legal execution."

The court held that "public policy" forbids such a contract.

The court pointed out that this is the first time the question has arisen for judicial decision in this state. Lawyers said it establishes a precedent of far-reaching importance.

Millen actually took out the policy on December 22, 1933, prior to the commission of the crimes for which he was later tried and condemned to death. His execution took place June 7, 1935. Executed with him were his brother, Irving, and Abraham Faber, M. I. T. graduate, likewise convicted of participation in the murders.

Aid Seen in Repeal Of New Deal Laws

Congress Demands Aired on Hearst Query for Ending Recession

By GEORGE ROTHWELL BROWN

Special to Boston Evening American

WASHINGTON, March 30—While Congress appears to be chiefly concerned with the question of tax relief, and the elimination of fear as the principal aids to national recovery, a new note is beginning to be heard at the Capitol.

This is the position taken by Representative George A. Dondero, Republican, of Michigan, in reply to Mr. William R. Hearst's question:

"How can we change depression or recession into prosperity?"

Mr. Dondero answered that as follows:

"The Government should cease, through the President, its threats against business. Congress should begin to repeal some of the laws already passed. We should stop government competition with private business.

Representative Donald H. McLean, Republican, New Jersey:

"It has been proven that tariff duties to equalize costs of production at home and abroad are essential to our economic benefit. This is primarily because the American standard of living makes it necessary that American wage earners be paid higher wages than those abroad."

JITTERS BLAMED

Representative Luther Johnson, Democrat, of Texas:

"Fear should be supplanted by confidence. The world, nations and individuals have a bad case of jitters. The United States is in better shape than we think we are. The psychology of fear that grips us is largely without foundation."

Representative Harold Knutson, Republican, Minnesota:

"Restore confidence in our people.

"Abandon all unsound governmental activities.

Representative Bert Lord, Republican, New York, gave a partisan answer as the solution of question 12 on recovery:

Representative Alfred N. Phillips, Jr., Democrat, Connecticut:

"You ask in your last question how we can change depression or recession into prosperity. If any man could give a complete and final answer to this, he would be the savior of the world. I, therefore, make no pretense of being able to give a complete answer to this question. In general, however, I might state, my feeling is that if we can better distribute our products of the farm and factory, it will go a long way toward changing a depressed economic situation in America into something better."

FARM AID ASKED

Representative Sam Hobbs, Democrat, Alabama:

"By giving farmers parity prices for their products. This would more than double our national farmer-market."

Representative Francis D. Culkin, Republican, New York:

Representative Albert G. Rutherford, Republican, Pennsylvania:

"We must work out of the depression as we have done in the past. Everybody must take a lower wage, so that goods can be produced at a price that the mass of the population can buy them.

"For five years we have been trying to bring the purchasing power of the nation up to 'wages and shorter hours' and have not been able to do it. It never can be done and we may as well forget it. The country can't forge ahead by producing less at a higher price. We all must work the problem out the hard way. There is no soft or easy way of getting rid of depression."

Representative J. Will Taylor, Republican, Tennessee:

"Repeal all laws which penalize thrift and industry. Make the government stay out of business."

7 New Charges Against Stone

Sawyer's plea that the committee send the impeachment resolve to the House of Representatives for the institution of joint proceedings against Judge Stone, Bushnell told the committee:

"I think it despicable for Representative Sawyer to bring forward a private transaction, which, if it did occur, was founded on a respect and friendship of a lawyer who tried consistently before Judge Stone, a lawyer who is not now able to speak for hmiself in this desperate attempt to ruin another man."

MARKED BY CLASH

Interrupting, Representative Sawyer asked heatedly how he had maligned the late attorney and where such insinuations could be found in his remarks. Turning to him, Bushnell shouted:

"Of course there is! You charge that he (Delaney) made a loan to Judge Stone before whom he was tried. The obvious inference is that he sought favors, which, if true, would tend to prove both corrupt!"

To which Sawyer retorted:

"I made no charge against Mr. Delaney. The charges I made were against Judge Stone. I am not on the witness stand now. You are."

Bushnell ended the clash by remarking:

"I will be glad to go on the witness stand at any time to submit to your cross-examination if you will submit to mine."

MAKES CHARGE

Previously, the representative, in final summary of his charges, had asserted:

"Upon Judge Stone I place the responsibility for the two sad graves in New Hampshire, where lie the battered, broken bodies of two innocent lads who would be alive today if Judge Stone had not prostituted his influence as a judge to get their murderer out of prison."

His statements were made in connection with the release of Long from the Bridgewater State Farm at the alleged instigation of the East Cambridge judge.

Long later killed two New Hampshire boys in sex attacks and is now awaiting execution for one of the crimes.

SAYS FACTS SUPPRESSED

Tthe seven charges placed before the committee were:

1—That Judge Stone misappropriated the money entrusted to his care by clients. Specifically mentioned by Representative Sawyer was the Clarke estate case, upon which an impeachment move was voted by the House in 1933.

2—That the judge suppressed evidence in court and "misled a brother judge" so that "a dangerous, degenerate man was liberated from confinement to murder two children."

4—That Judge Stone used his influence as a member of the Massachusetts judiciary to impose on state officials who trusted him and that their misplaced trust sent Long to New Hampshire.

SAYS PLEDGE BROKEN

5—That Judge Stone failed to keep his pledge to state officials to watch Long after his release from Bridgewater.

6—That, called to give an account of his actions by Governor Hurley, Judge Stone was "evasive, concealed facts and gave false testimony."

7—That Judge Stone's acts "cover so long a period of time, are so many and of such serious character that they show Judge Stone is utterly devoid of that ethical sense and sound judgment which is demanded in a judge, and that to allow him to continue on a bench is to expose our people to acts of injustice from one supposed to administer justice."

Plan to Rush Dictator Bill Through this Week

Cochran emphatically denied reports that House leaders were rushing passage to avoid pressure from the country to kill the measure.

In urging delay in hearings, Gifford argued that the current decline of the stock market is linked by financial writers to threat of final enactment of the legislation conferring the broad powers on President Roosevelt.

In rejecting the Byrnes reorganization bill, passed by the Senate, the House committee supported its own bills, which are less drastic than the Senate measure in some respects.

The combined House bill grants President Roosevelt general power to reorganize the government, create six executive assistants to the President, establishes one-man rule on civil service and revises accounting practices.

AGAINST PUBLIC HEARINGS

"We are not trying to take advantage of anybody," said Chairman Cochran. "The committee voted against public hearings because there were 15 days of hearings by a joint committee and 14 days by the House committee. The House already has passed a general reorganization bill by a vote of 283 to 75."

Rep. Gifford asserted the House committee "has never had a single day of public hearings."

"I begged that action be postponed so that the public mind may be assured that there will be proper consideration," said Gifford. "The public is now aroused and frightened by the legislation.

"The public ought to know that the bill proposes to retain the comptroller general."

Cochran said the committee agreed the House would not include Senate provisions establishing a national resources board to carry out regional planning activity in its bill.

SEPARATE VOTE

If the Senate, in conference, insists upon this provision, it will be brought back to the House for a separate vote, he said.

The Senate bill contained a similar civil service provision, but abolished the comptroller general's office entirely, transferring its functions to the budget bureau. Scrapping of the general accounting office was the most controversial provision in the Senate.

Roosevelt's O. K. In TVA Move Hit

WASHINGTON, March 30 (INS)—Submission of the Tennessee Valley Authority inquiry resolution to President Roosevelt for his signature was assailed in the House today as administration leaders pushed the measure toward final enactment.

Opening debate on the resolution, Representative O'Connor, (D.), New York, chairman of the powerful Rules Committee, declared the move was "unprecedented in the history" of congressional probe legislation.

"Why should this be submitted to the President?" the fiery New Yorker demanded.

"Does this mean that we are going to submit constitutional amendments to him for his signature? Does this mean that every time this House passes a resolution for appointment of a page boy, we are going to have the President's signature?

"This is the first time such procedure was ever adopted. The Senate majority leader, Mr. Barkley, says it is necessary to give the effect of law. What law? This is no law."

Gaunt Seeks New Fight On 'Dictator Bill' Here

METHUEN, March 30—President Alfred C. Gaunt of the Smaller Business of New England, Inc., today urged little business men in this section to carry on the fight against President Roosevelt's proposed reorganization bill.

The measure, he warned in a statement, is "too much like the first step in other countries that have gone from democracy to dictatorship."

Asserting that the public was not aware of the "vital signifance of the bill until debate started," he declared:

"Smaller business men are particularly interested because they are least able to protect themselves from the consequence of government competition, government domination of private business or inflation. Their assets are their homes and businesses. They cannot move away or transfer their assets if our democratic system of government is changed."

Gaunt, who is president of the Merrimac Mills here, pointed out the dangers of abolishing the bipartisan civil service commission and the post of comptroller-general as proposed under the reorganization bill.

Such changes, he declared, would vest too much power in the presidency and would open civil service fields in particular to the ravages of political domination. They can only serve to destroy business confidence in the administration and delay recovery, he said.

The head of the little business men's organization also objected to the limiting of debate in the Senate during the recent arguments on the bill there as "undemocratic" procedure designed to stifle opposition.

Shift in Utility Taxes O. K'd

WASHINGTON, March 30 (AP)—The Senate Finance committee voted today to eliminate taxes on most utility holding company liquidations, in an effort to stimulate simplification of holding company structures.

The committee approved an amendment to the tax revision bill exempting from capital gains taxes transactions involved in such simplifications.

The amendment was approved after Chairman William O. Douglas of the Securities Commission had recommended it to the committee.

Douglas told reporters the proposal would permit the simplification of utility holding company systems under provisions of the public utility company holding act, without imposing heavy tax penalties.

As the law stands at present, Douglas said, the government is in a position of "holding a gun at the head of utility holding companies to make them simplify their structures, and then taxing them for complying."

Dictator Bill Lashed At G. O. P. Session Here

President Roosevelt's reorganization bill was assailed today in Hotel Statler by the Regional Sub-Committee of the Republican National Program Committee, meeting in a one-day session.

All 36 members of the sub-committee, including Senator Sybil Holmes of Brookline, attended the session, over which former Governor John H. Trumbull of Connecticut, the chairman, presided.

The meeting was held simultaneously with similar regional subcommittee meetings in other sections of the country, at each of which reports were made on the sounding out of the people as to what they wish in the way of government.

Results of the survey in the New England region and other sectional areas will be considered when the Republican national platform is next drawn up.

Although the meeting today was in executive session, it was learned that an attack had been made on the President's reorganization bill, but that the New England committee members expressed confidence that it would be defeated in the House.

And he returned again and again in this beloved characterization until his last appearance at Keith's in 1910. During these years hundreds of thousands of Bostonians found memorable enjoyment in this play. It was an era of security and prosperity. And it was a period wherein management of property presented few of the present-day complexities.

Today the advantages which a Living Trust offers to the individual are becoming increasingly apparent. At Old Colony, for example, under such a plan, you may entrust the entire management of your property to experienced hands. Duce Tells World Italy Set for War single mention of the Rome-Berlin axis in the course of his speech, despite his previous public endorsement of Reichsfuerher Hitler's annexation of Austria.

"War from the air," he said after extolling the Italian flying force as the most courageous in the world, "must be conducted in a manner designed to disrupt the plans of the enemy, dominate the skies and crush the morale of the population."

Describing the Italian philosophy of war as one which calls for a knockout blow to any enemy, Il Duce told the Senate that he is "preparing the men and the means for a war of quick decision."

"The best defense is an offensive.

"My policy has been to render Italy more efficient and more fear-inspiring in all its armed forces. I have provided Italy with a guarantee of security.

ALPS "SEALED"

"When our frontiers become hermetically sealed as is being done throughout the entire semicircle of our border, the Alps will have been made uncrossable—not only in the winter months but at all times.

"In 10 years Italy will have 50,000,000 people in the mother country alone."

"Many men are needed to comprise the big battalions essential for our defense. The extent of our preparedness has been amply proved. The dispatch of two army corps to Libya and the drain on our army necessitated by the situation in Spain have not weakened us.

"Italy has more than the right to possess a worthy navy. It has a duty to do so.

"There never can be too many guns in proportion to infantry. Guns have always been called the 'queens of battle.'"

Il Duce paid tribute to his army officers and to his governmental associates.

"The officers of the Italian army," he said, "constitute a hierarchy worthy of the highest respect. The question of unity of command in Italy has been solved by a policy of placing political strategy in the hands of the head of the government."

Mussolini took occasion to praise recent growth of the Italian navy.

"During the last few years," he said "it has given proof of its value. In 1941. Italy will have eight battleships, and of these four will be new ones.

CITES AIR STRENGTH

"In the next war, rest assured that our battleships will not remain in their harbors.

"Our air force is composed of several thousand airplanes, many of them of most modern type. Fifty thousand workers in many factories are building airplanes and airplane engines."

Mussolini's speech was in the form of a general review of Italy's army, navy and air force, and was delivered when the Senate had concluded debate on forthcoming armament appropriations. The address was broadcast throughout the country and to many countries abroad.

Revealing plans to make Italian rearmament independent of foreign imports, Mussolini said:

"I hope soon to obtain complete self-sufficiency of aircraft construction. Italy is now reaching the point where she will be able to amass between 20,000 and 30,000 trained pilots in event of emergency.

FLIERS SEASONED

"The Italian air force has now become legendary. The professional skill of our fliers and their contempt for danger is unmatched anywhere in the world.

"Hundreds of them have had experience in two wars. All our ground organizations are ready. We have many airports and landing grounds. A number of them—I will not specify exactly—are hidden.

"These landing fields have been prepared in every detail, as have depots for fuel and explosives of the most destructive power imaginable."

"By calling up all men from the ages of 21 to 55, Italy could mobilize an army of 8,000,000 men. By adding youths from 18 to 20, we could mobilize 9,000,000.

"Figuring that 50 per cent of this number must remain behind the lines, we can always figure on having between four and five million front-line fighters.

"This will demonstrate to you how ridiculous are the polemics in certain quarters beyond the Alps that sending of troops to Libya and Spain has weakened us.

DOZENS OF GENERALS

"Instead, all this has formidably reinforced us, not only from a moral viewpoint—but because we have now gone through the great experience of a war lived and won.

"Besides the great chiefs of the Ethiopian war, Marshals Badoglio, De Bono and Graziani, we now have dozens of generals who have made and remade war."

Dealing with war production, Mussolini said, Italy now has 580,033 workers in 876 factories turning out material at an uninterupted rate. The men, he said, are under military discipline.

Italy's program, Il Duce said:

"Will be designed to create a force capable of striking a terrific blow, rapidly and effectively.

"Our submarine fleet is the most powerful in the world. We have out-stripped all others, and it will be difficult, if not impossible, for any to equal our undersea fleet or take from us our first place.

"All our naval bases in the central and eastern Mediterranean have been reinforced. We have completed great deposits of combustibles. We have enough oil for a long period of operations. This is equally true of munitions and torpedoes."

Then Il Duce gave his approval to bombardment of civilian populations:

"War from the air must be conducted in a manner designed to disrupt the plans of the enemy, dominate the skies, and crush the morale of the population."

AIR FORCE FACILITIES

Vast improvement in the Italian air force and its facilities were detailed by Il Duce.

"Bases have been constructed for gasoline, oils and explosives of the most destructive kind," he said.

"Regarding bombs and air torpedoes, progress has been made which must be regarded as extremely satisfactory.

"The technique of bombardment has been bettered through increased possibilities of striking the target, even when the planes or target are in rapid motion.

"War from the skies is destined always to assume major importance in the war of tomorrow."

Preparations should be made in advance for depopulation of metropolitan areas, said the premier.

WARNING TO MOVE

"At this moment I say to all those who are able to shift their residence to minor cities, villages, or the country, they will do well not to await the zero hour.

"In case of war, everything which prevents mobilization (such as civilian movements from the cities) might be prohibited. So much the worse, then, for those who have not foreseen this and are late."

Landing the Italian troops in Spain, Mussolini revealed that he devotes a major portion of his day to the military problem.

"I say that whoever makes any attempt against the right and interest of the nation will find, on land and sea and in the air, immediate and resolute reply of the entire people with their arms."

He recalled that Napoleon once said the Italians would become one day the world's best soldiers.

That's what we want," he declared. "We desire that Napoleon's prediction will become a Fascist and Roman reality of our time."

Duce, Emmanuel Honored With New Titles

ROME, March 30 (INS)—To commemorate Premier Mussolini's historic exposition of Italy's preparedness for war, the Chamber of Deputies today conferred upon him and King Victor Emmanuel a new title, that of "Field Marshal of the Empire."

Both the monarch and Il Duce were created marshals of the empire's land, sea and air forces.

General Franco Leads Armies On to Lerida

City, 80 Miles From Barcelona, Ringed By Large Force

HENDAYE, France, at the Spanish Border, March 30 (AP)—Generalissimo Francisco Franco today assumed personal command of his Insurgent armies closing in on Lerida, key to the government capital, Barcelona, 80 miles to the east.

With his main body reported at the outskirts of the city on the highway from Fraga, the Insurgent chieftain threw other units forward in sweeping movements designed to encircle Lerida, all but deserted by its civilian population.

Insurgent reports said huge smoke clouds darkened the environs of the besieged city.

Part of General Jean Yague's column of Moors, which had led the advance from Fraga on the southwest, branched off to the southeast into the valley of the Segre River to join supporting columns advancing up the river bed.

POWER PLANT SEIZED

Franco's plan apparently was to strike Lerida from its two southern corners, his main body driving along the Fraga highway from the southwest, and part of Yague's command striking for the southeastern corner, where the Segre enters the city.

Before taking command before Lerida, Franco inspected the Barbastro sector, 35 miles to the northwest, where his northern wing was moving slowly southeastward along both banks of the Cinca river.

FIGHTING IN LERIDA

Insurgent officers at Irun said they had received additional news from their aviators confirming yesterday's reports of fighting in the center of Lerida.

Two were killed, ten wounded and a train of merchandise intended for Barcelona was destroyed, it was said.

Quantities of heavy bombs were aimed at the station, where cars of French-donated clothing were waiting to start southward.

During the raid some of the attacking planes crossed over French territory, drawing fire from French anti-aircraft batteries. No hits were reported, and the invading ships sped away.

BIG PUSH DELAYED

There were three air raids on Lerida yesterday, but Insurgents indicated the big push would be withheld until recent gains had been consolidated.

Scenes of confusion about Lerida were described. Abandoned military equipment and dead soldiers littered the roads. Toward the coast, streams of refugees and disorganized troops clogged the highways.

The government was mobilizing hastily organized recruits and throwing them into the battle. The International Brigade was again sent into the fray for a desperate stand.

In Barcelona, Defense Minister Indalecio Prieto said 10,000 volunteers had enlisted in the last five days and were being sent to the front.

Nazis in Control At Budapest, Forecast

Paris Writer Predicts Hitler Sweep Clear Across Balkans

PARIS, March 30 (INS)—Genevieve Tabouis, French political commentator who accurately predicted Germany's annexation of Austria, today foresaw "establishment of a Hungro-Nazi government at Budapest within 15 days or three weeks at most."

The writer said the French foreign office is receiving "terribly pessimistic" reports regarding the torrent of Pan-German activities in Central Europe and the Baltic states, and said these operations were extending south even as far as Athens, Greece and Ankarra, Turkey.

"The month of June," wrote Tabouis, "can be as perilous as August, 1914."

The Paris newspaper L'Oeuvre stated Italy is preparing to transfer troops from Libya to Insurgent-held Spanish Morocco shortly, and that 5000 German troops disembarked at Cadiz, Spain, on Sunday, presumably to fight with the Insurgents in the Spanish civil war.

The newspaper also said German engineers are constructing an enormous poison gas factory at Ceuta, Spanish Morocco.

Czech Minorities Press for Autonomy

BERLIN, March 30 (AP)—The cry of for autonomy from four minority groups echoed through Czechoslovakia with increasing vigor today, meeting with new assurances here for protection for Germans beyond the Reich's borders.

Germans, Slovaks, Hungarians and Poles put their cards plainly on the government table during yesterday's tumultuous Parliament session in Prague.

German newspapers, reporting the heightening tension between the four minority groups on one side and the Czech government on the other, made plain that only drastic reorganization could solve the crisis.

Influential Nazis warned that Czechoslovakia must make a fundamental change in her political structure if she would save her independence.

Apathy to Church Blamed In Spread of Communism

Spiritual sterility in America and the unsettled social convictions of American Protestantism were today seen as possible causes for the growth of Communism here by the Rev. Paschal Kerwin, O. F. M., Franciscan father who spent three years in Loyalist Spain.

Commenting on the charges made by Ellery Sedgwick, editor of the Atlantic Monthly, that radicalism was on the ascendancy in Protestant churches, Father Kerwin said:

"The editor, naturally, has recourse to much material. Both of us spent time in Spain, he in Franco's territory and I in Loyalist territory. But as a layman he can speak more freely.

THREE YEARS IN SPAIN

"It is not for me to judge the Protestant church. But I spent three years in a country intensely Catholic and on election day, February 16, 1936, so sure were the Rightists in Madrid that everybody decided a Leftist win was impossible.

"That was the day the revolution was born. The Communists had done very little in the way of open campaigning, but secretly they had organized a powerful system which would open fire all over Spain in 24 hours time.

"But they won in a culture of religious intensity and vibrant nationalism. What chance would we have here?

"Religious indifference is paramount. The method in Spain, from the viewpoint of Communist strategy, was to strike first at religious tradition.

CITES INDIFFERENCE

"This was not to be accomplished through counter-argument but through the elimination of all sources of true knowledge and education. Right now in this country we are indifferent to such sources.

"Since my return from Spain I have been appalled at the listlessness of the average American toward his church. Because of Christian integrity in Spain the first things Communists struck at were schools, colleges and churches permeated with the Christian tradition."

Father Kerwin said that 80 per cent of the population in Loyalist Madrid were "militant Christians" and that when General Franco is within 10 miles of the city about half of the Loyalist army, fighting under compulsion, would desert.

Hull Asks Mexico Pay Oil Concerns

provements therein of various kinds, and have been dependent upon them for their own livelihood.

"This government has not undertaken and does not undertake to question the right of the government of Mexico in the exercise of its sovereign power to expropriate properties within its jurisdiction.

"This government has, however, on numerous occasions and in the most friendly manner pointed out to the government of Mexico that in accordance with every principle of international law, of comity between nations and of equity, the properties of its nationals so expropriated are required to be paid for by compensation representing fair, assured and effective value to the nationals from which these properties were taken.

ALLOWED TO DRAG

"The recent expropriation by the Mexican government of oil properties belonging to American citizens is therefore but one incident in a long series of incidents of this character, and accordingly raises no new question.

"The subject now under consideration between the government of the United States and the government of Mexico is the matter of compensation for various properties of American citizens expropriated in the past few years. It is my very earnest hope that because of the very friendly relations existing between the two governments, a fair and equitable solution of this problem may soon be found by the Mexican government."

While, as Hull said, the Mexican government has owed American nationals indemnification for farm and other properties expropriated for some time, until today the department has been permitting negotiations over these issues to drag along their normal slow course.

RELATIONS GRAVE

State department officials made no secret of the fact they consider relations between Mexico and the United States at a grave point as a result of the direct expropriation of the oil companies' properties and subsequent developments.

Announcement from Mexico that a special session of the Congress had been called by President Cardenas for the purpose of putting through a loan and other legislation of a character distinctly friendly to the United States, apparently brought no change in the State Department's attitude.

House Navy Bill Easily Passed

WASHINGTON, March 30 (INS)—Carrying funds for 22 new warships, the annual Navy Department appropriation bill was passed by the Senate today after debate in which "little navy" advocates failed to attract a following.

The measure, previously passed by the House, now goes to conference.

Altogether for regular activities of the Navy Department, during the next fiscal year, the bill as passed by the Senate provides $549,227,842—a net increase of $32,348 over the amount approved by the House.

While the Senate was grinding out this appropriation, the largest in peacetime history of the nation, plans were being made by the Senate Naval Affairs committee for hearings shortly on the Administration's bill to authorize an additional outlay of $1,100,000,000 for new construction.

In the bill passed by the Senate today, the House warship construction program was approved. It calls for expenditure of $18,442,100 to begin construction of the following vessels:

Two battleships to cost $70,850,000 each; two cruisers costing $22,288,300 each; eight destroyers, $8,534,000 each; six submarines $6,412,500; one mine-sweeper $2,054,000; one submarine tender, $12,720,200; one fleet tug $1,759,000, and one oiler $9,168,800.

France to Spurn Naval Race

(Copyright, 1938)

LONDON, March 30 (INS)—In a sudden about-face, France decided today to refrain from joining the United States and Great Britain in invoking the escalator clause of the 1936 London naval treaty to permit construction of oversize capital ships by the signatories.

International News Service learned, however, that France is agreeable to invocation of the escalator or "escape" clause by Britain and the United States.

The French decision was taken after Washington, London and Paris had made preliminary arrangements to issue a statement this week challenging Japan's bid for naval supremacy by invoking the escalator clause.

The French government, it was revealed, will issue a statement explaining the view of France that it is not necessary for her to build capital ships of more than 35,000 tons, the present treaty limit.

Existing ratios will be maintained as to numbers of ships, the statement will say, meaning that Anglo-American parity will be kept intact and that both Britain and the United States are prepared to build as many ships as necessary to keep the old 5-5-3 ratio.

Roosevelt Reveals Why Parley Failed

ments, especially under non-democratic governments, were increasing by leaps and bounds. Trade between nations was continuing to fall off because of newly imposed quotas and other trade barriers.

Armaments, Trade Barriers Halt Peace

Already in 1933 there existed, as there still exists today, an amazing failure on the part of governments to recognize that increase of armaments and increase of trade barriers go hand in hand with prevention of peace and economic rehabilitation. Armaments cannot be reduced unless trade barriers are reduced; and reciprocal trade increases cannot bring world stability without reduction of the vast amounts of money and labor tied up in the production of arms.

My message of May 16, 1933, was intended to bring this important truth home to the European leaders, and I felt even then that if the disarmament conference failed in Geneva such failure would militate greatly against the success of the coming economic conference in London.

In the same way, the evil economic factors of continued arming made clear that in the economic conference a mere discussion of international banking and foreign exchange would be futile. Obviously, the stabilization of currency and the relationship of these currencies to each other internationally depended, as they do today, on the stabilization of economics within each nation, which included diverting production from armaments into non-military industry and at the same time lowering the international barriers raised against a freer trade.

For the first time, in this appeal to the nations, emphasis was placed on two fundamentals of the reduction of armaments; first, that weapons of offensive warfare should be gradually eliminated and second, that invasion should be banned during the disarmament period.

Warning to Nations Defaulting on Debts

The reasons behind these proposals are even stronger four years later than they were in 1933.

(Editor's Note—The President's thesis that dsiarmament and general economic welfare are interlocking questions was also present in his treatment of the World War debts. Following the Hoover moratorium of 1931-'32, payments became mere "tokens" or outright defaults, until in June, 1934, the President told Congress that Finland was the only nation which had met all its obligations in full.

He said: "The people of the debtor nations will . . . bear in mind the faact that the American people are certain to be swayed by the use which debtor countries make of their available resources—whether such resources would be applied for the purposes of recovery as well as for reasonable payment on the debt . . . or for purposes of unproductive nationalistic expenditures . . .")

"An international economic conference designed to restore international trade and facilitate exchange."

One of the first things which I undertook after inauguration was to lay the groundwork for such a conference through preliminary conversations and exchanges of points of view with the heads of other governments.

Some preliminary work had already been done. In August, 1932, the United States agreed to be represented upon a preparatory committee of experts charged with making a preliminary examination of matters to be submitted to the London economic conference.

Bids MacDonald To Parley in U. S.

This preparatory committee prepared agenda in which it summarized the problems which had been facing the nations of the world, requiring "a broad solution by concerted action along the whole front."

A wide range of subjects—economic, financial, commercial and social—was included in the original program of this conference.

(Editor's Note: On April 6, 1933, the President invited Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald of Great Britain to Washington to discuss the economic situation.)

This invitation was one of many which I extended to the governing heads of other nations. During April and May we were honored by visits from the leading government officials of Great Britain, Canada, France, Italy, Argentina, Germany, Mexico, China, Brazil, Japan and Chile.

Our conversations related to many subjects over a wide and varied field.

Economic stability in its broadest sense was emphasized. In many of these conferences, disarmament was also stressed.

It is a simple fact that stabilization of currencies by artificially pegging the foreign exchanges was only one of many subjects of the conversations.

Internal price levels within individual countries, improvement of the general price level and especially removal of obstacles to international trade were considered at least of equal importance. We would have to learn by experience what were the natural rate regions for the stabilization of the important currencies.

This is recorded here in view of the subsequent effort at the London economic conference to make everything depend upon its immediate efforts to stabilization of exchange.

The monetary and economic conference convened at London on June 12, 1933. The American delegation to it was headed by Hon. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State.

It soon became evident that there were great obstacles, during those days of rapid economic change, in the way of immediate general agreement among the representatives of the many different countries, each of which had its own peculiar domestic economic circumstances and problems.

The discussions among financial technicians, that had been inaugurated outside of the conference but simultaneously with the beginning, began to indicate a determination and insistance by some of the countries upon some definite and immediate form of stabilization of the exchange rates, particularly between the dollar, the franc and the pound.

The concentration of attention in the early stages of the conference upon this one question was grossly excessive, particularly in the light of well-known conditions which would have made any decisive action at this time premature.

Gold-Bloc Nations "Inspire" Rumors

Rumors became so insistent that the so-called gold-bloc nations were going to insist definitely upon exchange stabilization that the Secretary of the Treasury found it necessary to issue a statement on June 15th denying London rumors of an agreement.

The newspaper reports which his statement denied were without question "suggested" by the so-called gold-bloc nations. They were wholly contrary to the position taken by the Secretary of State and the other American delegates.

It is a simple fact that throughout the London monetary and economic conference the President and Secretary of State worked personally in complete accord. Those who are in possession of all the facts know that press stories and other reports referring to divergency of views in London or in Washington, were caused principally by the over-enthusiasm or unwarranted assumption of authority on the part of some who took part in the work of the American delegates, but were not themselves members of the delegation.

U. S. Refuses to Be Drawn Into Net

It became more and more clear that the gold-bloc nations were seeking only to bring about a temporary and experimental stabilization between their monies and the monies of Great Britain and the United States, neither of which was at that time on a free gold basis.

This attitude involved, in effect, an ultimatum: that if the United States did not enter the proposed narrow agreement the gold-bloc nations would not discuss the other matters on the agenda, but would merely study them and defer decision until some postponed meeting of the conference.

For two good reasons, the United States could not yield to this demand: first, it would have terminated our national price-level increase which at that moment was restoring our own economic activity more nearly to the pre-depression level, and, second, action on reducing trade barriers and on other important matters on the agenda had to be taken up simultaneously with the question of exchage arrangements if the conference evpected to accomplish permament results.

Boom Green for Lieut.-Governor

By ALFRED D. WHELTON

Thomas H. Green, state civil service commissioner, loomed today as a possible candidate for the office of lieutenant-governor.

Green's candidacy has been demanded by delegations from Lowell and Worcester upon separate occasions, it was learned.

Green is no novice to politics. He weathered many a storm in the Charlestown area but has repeatedly turned "thumbs down" to his friends in that sector when they suggested he run for higher state office.

It was learned that he greeted the delegations from other parts of the state very cordially but insisted—for the time being at least—that he didn't contemplate running for higher office.

He was born in Charlestown, had his early schooling in that section and later organized the famous Morning Glory Club and the Thomas H. Green Club.

In the hectic wartime period of 1917-1919 he served as a member of the constitutional convention and was a member of the House of Representatives during the same period.

During 1920 and 1921 he served as a member of the Senate and then was elected to the Democratic national convention in 1924.

Today Green had no comment to make on the demands of the delegations from "up state."

Members of the delegation said however, that he indicated he had no immediate plans for entering public life, other than the office he now holds.

Should Green decide to run, he will have Democratic opposition from John H. Walsh, former state commander of the American Legion and several other leading Democrats, who have announced plans for nomination to the chair now held by Francis E. Kelly, a definite candidate for governor.

Hurl 'Unfair' Charge in Job Probe; List More Names

Charges that temporary political appointees to the State Unemployment Compensation Commission have been deliberately allowed an unfair advantage over other persons planning to take competitive civil service examinations for those posts were hurled today by City Councillor Robert Gardiner Wilson, Jr.

"It has been declared at the State House that the present temporary appointees at the Unemployment Compensation Board will not be given any inside track or advantage in the civil service examinations to be held for those positions, nor any experience credit for the time during which they served," said Wilson.

"In addition I am told that so-called statistical machines in use in this department are not in very general use except by the state and by some large insurance companies.

"I am told that part of the marking will be on practical problems and to that extent of course those who have been in a position to observe the workings of the machines will automatically have acquired that great advantage."

This is the eighth in a series of lists of persons employed by the State Unemployment Compensation Commission.

The Boston Evening American is publishing these names because of the widespread interest in the order which was passed by the Legislature calling for an investigation of the hiring of employes of the commission.

The lists include both names of regularly appointed persons from the civil service lists and those named as "provisional employes."

A REPORTER AT THE PAPAL COURT

by THOMAS B. MORGAN

Thomas B. Morgan describes Pope Pius XI as a patron of invention and scientific progress. He tell how medieval splendor and Machine Age comfort mingle in the Vatican.

CHAPTER 25

Books are the Pope's hobby. Never does he miss an evening's reading of the latest works in philosophy and science. His table is filled with the best in practically all languages as he reads Italian, German, French, English and Spanish perfectly.

The librarians of the Vatican library have instructions to watch for the newest and most profound studies in modern thought and to bring them to him.

It is as if he were back in the Ambrosian Library where he ordered all the new books brought to him. Here in his private library he at least scans them all, and when a book which shows promise of being really penetrating comes to his notice he will read it in its entirety.

Thus his reading is always in the heavy vein, and in addition to these weighty meditations he will often take documents or manuscripts written in ecclesiastical Latin and examine them. To him these are truly works of art, and from the mere handling of them he derives an artist's pleasure in the touch and feel of a masterpiece.

OFTEN WORKS LATE

The Pope usually retires at ten-thirty, but this hour is not a definite fixture. Often from St. Peter's square the light can be seen burning in the library as late as midnight.

When he was carrying on his negotiations for the Lateran Pacts, Pius XI would be up until two in the morning conferring with Cardinal Gasparri on the intricate questions which were included in those lengthy documents.

When there is work to be done and when matters of immediate urgency are before him, he may remain at his desk until well along in the night.

Until he retires, the papal servants must remain at their posts. Malvestiti stays until the Pope is finally in bed. Two sediari must be on duty in the private apartment. They remain there as custodians.

Before Malvestiti himself retires, he must notify the sediari that the Pope has actually gone to bed. These then close all the doors of the apartment in a somewhat ceremonial manner. Although there are electric lights everywhere, they go from one door to another with a dimly lit lantern following the tradition of the days before gas and electricity.

Resplendent in their red liveries, they inspect every corner of the lavish abode minutely like medieval turnkeys. After having made the rounds, they retire in the waiting room reserved for them during the day time.

ALWAYS ON DUTY

Their beds are collapsible and during the official hours are folded and placed inside the low wardrobes used for the hats, capes, and coats of visiting prelates and laymen. At night, the two on duty must be within easy access of the Pope.

Pride in perpetuity possesses the Vatican palaces. It is Vatican atmosphere. Frescoes, uniforms, priestly garb and imbedded custom, centuries and millennia old, impose their right of eminent domain.

Anything to disturb that right of perpetuity is frowned upon. This age of mechanical and scientific progress has flung itself against these impregnable walls of stayed permanence to be repulsed again and again.

The coming of Pius XI began an era of Vatican modernization. The Vatican did not possess an automobile until 1922. There were no typewriters until after the World War. No movie camera was permitted until 1922 and then only to be turned out with ignominious consequences and never restored.

The sound film truck came in 1929 and it also was allowed but one visit. The Pope's voice was only once thus recorded. Quite recently vacuum cleaners, dictaphones, typewriter transmitters, photo transmitters, loud speakers, and finally an aeroplane have been added to the modernization scheme.

PATRON OF SCIENCE

Pius XI, friend of these mechanical intruders, has revolutionized the material instruments of the Holy See. He was always a patron of invention and scientific progress. His bent for research did not stop with Latin manuscripts.

The discoveries he had made in delving into the aeronautic physics of Leonardo da Vinci showed his mechanical inclinations. We have seen that he enthused like a boy when he beheld his first aeroplane in Milan just when modern flying had begun. As Supreme Head of Vatican City and in contrast with its vested placidity, he welcomed unwelcome generators, chugging diesels, grinding printing presses, electric elevators and clanking machine shops.

His first use of modern gadgets occurred when he accepted an automobile presented to him by Milan admirers in the first year of his reign. When the machine was delivered, he did not assign a Roman prince nor a pontifical prelate to receive it in his name but went personally to the Courtyard of Belvedere where the donors had parked it.

He got into the car and was driven around the Vatican gardens. Then he returned to the courtyard to thank the donors for the gift. There was not even a garage for it in the whole of the Vatican buildings.

The Papal automobile with throne of satin and gold. The luxurious vehicle was presened to the Pontiff by the city of Milan. Yet Pope Pius XI is said to prefer an American machine.

He ordered it to be placed with the papal state carriages, near the stables where the sixteen papal blacks used for the Vatican carriages were kept. That was the beginning.

In April, 1927, the blacks were superseded by additional motor cars and sold outright. The coach house became the private garage of the Holy Father where five shining limousines destined for his exclusive use share shelter with the papal state carriages.

Although the Pope possessed his first automobile the year he ascended the throne, there was little use for it because he was limited to the gravel roads of his 120-acre domain. It was not until after the Lateran Pacts that papal automobiles could be used for making trips.

USES OLD CARS

It was then that the Pope's personal fleet was increased to five, each machine a gift from some organization or from the manufacturers. The number includes two Italian cars, one French, one German and one American car.

Since 1929, when most of them were donated, new models have rendered them somewhat antiquated as automobiles go, but they are still luxurious cars. The Pope is not a car-a-year man. He keeps the old cars as he would a desk or a family wardrobe.

Even if he were the object of a sales campaign it is certain that he has resistance enough to keep the old as long as they give good service. He has but to hint for a new car and a fleet of them would be presented to him.

Of the Pope's present fleet, the old eight-cylinder 1929 model has been the favorite for a long time. It carries license plate Number 1 and was the first licensed car in Vatican City.

It is a convertible limousine and to the Pontiff is more comfortable than the rest. Its suspension is said to be more elastic and this feature has permitted the Holy Father to take a doze while on a drive.

VELVET UPHOLSTERY

Black, it is upholstered in grey silk and carries the papal coat of arms on the rear doors. The metal parts of the interior are gold plated while the door handles are in solid silver. There are two collapsible seats for the use of the Pope's secretaries, as by unbroken tradition from the days of the papal coaches, the Pope always sits alone in the back seat.

It was this car which the Holy Father used when he first emerged in automobile from the Vatican on December 20, 1929, to take formal possession of St. John Lateran as Bishop of Rome.

The car which carries license plate Number 2 is an eight-cylinder limousine, gift of the Royal Italian Automobile Club.

Even more luxurious than the American car, it is upholstered in red damask and adorned with fittings of goldplate; the dark crimson body is embellished with door handles of solid silver and the papal coat of arms in solid gold.

The third car was presented by a company in Turin. The body is maroon, the upholstery red velvet. The fittings follow the style of the other two with goldplate inside and silver outside.

The fourth car is an eight-cylinder, the gift of a German firm. It is dark red, upholstered in multi-colored Venetian velvet. The metal fittings are similar to those of the other cars, but an unusual departure lies in the substitution of one central armchair for the back seat.

MUST SIT ALONE

This corresponds to papal etiquette since the Pope must sit alone. A cabinet alongside the armchair provides space where books, cigars, pencils, maps, containers and other objects for the Pope's use may be kept.

Number 5 is a six-cylinder, a gift of the Italian branch of a French company. The firm donated the parts, which were assembled in Milan by Italian workmen serving without pay.

More lavish papal emblems decorate its body of maroon and gold. Upholstery of red velvet and metal fittings of solid gold enrich the interior. A central throne distinguishes its papal character.

It is a gala car although it does not approach the luxury of the old state berlins which are kept beside it.

They are masterpieces of the coach-builder's art, elaborately embellished and gilded. They were usually drawn by six black horses, mounted by postillions. A bewigged driver sat on the coach-box while two lackeys occupied places at the back of the body.

The collection of berlins represents another era while the five automobiles bespeak the new era ushered in by Pius XI.

The Pope uses his cars alternately with careful impartiality, in order to grant each donor a share of the papal favor. His chauffeur, Giovanni Politi, was his coachman in Milan. The Pope loves speed but while he was limited to the Vatican grounds he never had a chance for any rapid spurts.

Since he has been spending his summers in the papel villa at Castelgandolfo in the Alban Hills, he drives out there often at sixty miles an hour along the straightaways of the Appian Way. He has had to stop for blow-outs.

On such occurrences he usually gets out and walks around while the chauffeur puts on the spare.

RADIO FROM MARCONI

Not less imposing than the vehicular transformation was the adoption of radio. Radio entered the Vatican City on February 16, 1931, through the munificence of the late Marquis Guglielmo Marconi, the wireless inventor, who donated one of the most powerful stations in the world to the Pope.

Few of the new mechanical and scientific devices installed in Vatican City interested the Pope more. During the construction of the station, he visited the site several times in company with Marconi who explained to him the progress in the installation of the apparatus.

The Pontiff was desirous of knowing every detail and regarded himself as supremely favored in this by the presence of radio's pioneer.

The station includes the machine room, the amplifer room, the traffic room, the storage battery room and the hall for the receiving and transmitting sets.

Even in Vatican history, crowded as it is with epochal events, the day of the official opening of the station stands out. It was the first time that any Pope had ever spoken into any mechanical or electrical device.

It was the first time that a Pope's voice had been heard beyond the human carrying range. There were not more than 50 persons present because the station, having no broadcasting studio, was not equipped for a large crowd. But what transpired was heard by scores of millions all over the world.

Pius XI and members of his court were received at the entrance by the wireless inventor who wore a full dress suit although the ceremony occurred in mid-afternoon.

Marconi conducted the Pope through the various halls and then assisted him to a throne in the small transmitting room. The inventor personally superintended the pickup. It was he who introduced Pope Pius XI to the world.

INFORMAL CHAT ON AIR

The speech lasted half an hour and in practically every country the broadcasting systems stood by and cancelled their usual programs to get the speech in full. The address was delivered in Latin, and within a few minutes translators were ready to read the various versions for each separate country.

The English translation was made by Monsignor Francis J. Spellman, the influential Boston prelate, whose voice was carried clearly and delivered to American listeners through all broadcasting systems.

A two-way transmission had been arranged with the National Broadcasting Company and when Monsignor Spellman stepped to the microphone he also put the receiver to his ear.

At the other end was Monsignor Stephen J. Donahue, present auxiliary bishop of New York. Both began personal conversations thinking that they had not yet been switched out on the air.

"Hello, Steve," said Monsignor Spellman.

"Hello, Frank," replied Monsignor Donahue.

"Steven, can you hear me all right?"

"Yes, Frank, I can hear you. Shoot."

"Tell me when they are going to put me on the air."

"Wait a minute," said Monsignor Donahue, pausing to ask NBC engineers when the conversation was going on the network. "You're on all the time, Frank."

The neo-bishops suddenly dropped their informal chat and Monsignor Spellman began reading the translated version of the Pope's address.

The broadcasting company was happy since it had had a human interest angle on the private conversations of high prelates without ecclesiastical dignity.

Rites for Dr. Gilpatric At Winchester on Friday

Funeral services for Dr. William H. Gilpatric, well-known orthodontist and former president of the Massachusetts Dental Society, will be held at the First Congregational Church, Winchester, Friday at 3 p. m. He died at his Cabot street, Winchester, home yesterday.

Graduated from Harvard Dental Schol in 1905, Dr. Gilpatric specialized in orthodontia at his Commonwealth offices. A former president of the Harvard Dental Alumni Association, he was the immediate past president of the Harvard Odontological Society.

He was a member of the American Academy of Dental Science, the New York Society of Orthodontists, the American Dental Association and Delta Sigma Delta fraternity.

He is survived by his widow, Carolyn Draper Gilpatric, and a son, William Henry, Jr., a student at the Harvard Dental School.

J. WHITNEY BEALS

Services were being arranged today for J. Whitney Beals, 71, Boston stock broker, who died in a Milford, Ct., hospital.

He was reported to have brought the first motion picture to America in 1896. While the returns of the McKinley election were being shown on the side of the New York Journal building he presented a motion picture of a Russian procession on a screen outside the building.

He is survived by two daughters and two brothers.

WALTER McDUFFEE

SPRINGFIELD, March 30—Funeral rites were planned today for Walter V. McDuffee, 68, for 38 years head of the Latin department of Classical High School, whose death in St. Petersburg, Fla., has been received here.

He retired from active teaching in 1934 and had been in ill health for some time. In 1936 he resigned from the state advisory board of education as a protest against the displacement of Dr. Payson Smith as state commissioner of education.

JOHN G. BRODERICK

Rites for retired Patrolman John G. Broderick, 82, on door duty at old police headquarters when he retired 35 years ago, were to be held from his Pleasant street, Canton home today. A solemn high mass of requiem in St. John's Church, Canton, was to follow at 9 a. m.

ARTHUR H. TURNER

SPRINGFIELD, March 30 (AP) Arthur H. Turner, 65, director of the Springfield Symphony Orchestra from 1922 until it disbanded in 1933, died last night.

GEORGE CALLAHAN

LOWELL, March 30—George T. Callahan, 74, stage manager of Keith's RKO Theater here since its opening in 1911, died suddenly in his home on Third street at 3 a. m. today.

Thomas Jefferson Memorial Approved

WASHINGTON, March 30 (AP)—A circular, white marble memorial to Thomas Jeferson will stand on the banks of the tidal basin. A congressional commission approved the design after weeks of discussion.

Rep. Boylan (D.) of New York said the commission's plans would not require destruction of any cherry trees—a point that previously blocked approval.

CHAPTER 27

"We find that the deceased, Barbara James Winslow Grafton, died by strangulation at the hands of person or persons unknown."

In a shaking voice the foreman of the coroner's jury announced his verdict and, for at least twenty seconds, a penetrating stillness pervaded Freebooter's Hall's spacious game room.

Features taut and shiny with sweat, Inspector Boyd stepped forward and took charge of the situation. "Your verdict, Doctor?"

"The verdict, sir, is murder, premeditated and atrocious!"

"Thank you." The C. I. D. man's voice did no increase in volume but it held the metallic timbre of a prison door clanging shut.

"No one who was present on this island last night is to leave the premises until an investigation can be conducted."

Again silence fell to be broken by Gail Grafton's gentle sobbing and the low murmur of her father's attempts to comfort her. From his corner Major Allenby studied the whole group.

Yonder sat Cora Sue, sobered at last, her eyes red from weeping; Kathleen was clinging with difficulty to her usual sang froid; Creepy was staring at the floor and Townley Ward studied the foreman of the jury with fascinated eyes.

As for Terry James, he was pale as that figure cast up by the waves, and Stanley Gibbons sat hunched over, eyes riveted on Gail clad in a black tailored suit. Sir George might have been a figure wrought in light bronze, so rigid and impassive did he sit, but a watchfulness in his look dispelled the illusion.

Have YOU the Detective Instinct? Then Clip This Story for—CLUES!

Now the modern camera joins the magnifying glass of Sherlock Holmes as potent instruments of crime detection. Examine carefully all pictures that illustrate "THE CASTLE ISLAND CASE." Some of them give important clues as to its ultimate solution. Clip the pictures from day to day! Check them for detail as you read the story!! By doing so and exercising that detective instinct which is in most of us, you should be able to beat Major Roger Allenby to the discovery of the guilty party or parties. Read the story from day to day and, above all, examine its camera clues most carefully!

Inspector Boyd resumed.

"Incredible as it may seem, we have every reason to believe that Mrs. Grafton's murderer is in this room. I urge, and advise, that any person or persons having any knowledge of this crime make an immediate statement. It will count in their favor."

Clip the Camera Clues

Again a penetrating silence. Somewhere far above stairs Peter could be heard wailing. "I want Mummy! Where's my Mummy?" Even Kathleen bit her too-bright lips and looked quickly aside.

When no one stirred, Inspector Boyd drew himself up, spoke in succinct accents.

"Very well. Constable Lunt will remain on the premises. You are all to consider yourselves as material witnesses, and are therefore warned against making any effort to leave this estate."

Quietly, he gathered up his omnipresent notebook and jerked a nod to Superintendent of Police Tyson who had remained silent as an image in the back of the room.

Uneasily, the witnesses arose and fumbled among the chairs as if in a daze.

The whole company filed out, heels clacking loudly on the game room's composition floor, their faces wan by the inadequate light of this subterranean room.

Back upstairs once more, Tyson beckoned Allenby aside and entered a library in which waited the coroner and various officials.

"Well, Major, I am impatient to learn your reaction to this dreadful business. Any suggestions?"

Gray hair frostily agleam in the sunlight, Allenby said, "Sorry, but so far there's extremely little to go on. First, however, I recommend that a diving apparatus be brought to the island. So far there has been no success in a search for the object used to strangle Mrs. Grafton—though 'garrot' might come nearer to the case."

"What implement was used, would you say?"

A FEMALE KILLER?

Allenby picked up a police photograph depicting the close-up of the murdered girl's throat. For some time he scanned the print.

"I see imprinted on the flesh a pattern of some sort—as if the implement used was coarsely woven—flat."

Inspector Boyd leaned forward.

"Tell me, Major, in your opinion could a woman have committed this crime?"

"Yes. Most of the women present were good, almost superlative swimmers. I was struck with the fact while watching them in the water last night. It wouldn't require any colossal strength to twist a cord or some such article about a woman's neck.

"A strong jerk would shock the vagus nerve and induce immediate unconsciousness in a victim. Drowning would follow."

"You have no idea of about when or where the attack took place?"

Allenby's squarish shoulders rose in an apologetic shrug.

"No. It would be impossible to say. The moon was dodging in among the clouds and the surf was loud enough to drown out any but the shrillest cries."

"I see. Tell us, Major, how do you account for the fact that Mrs. Grafton's disappearance escaped your notice?"

A faint grimace swept over Allenby's features.

"Because my attention was directed to two other people both of whom I thought in more danger than Mrs. Grafton."

"You wouldn't care to say at this point who those people were?"

Allenby's smile offered an apology.

"Gail was one—the other, well, it was only a guess and a bad one, so I won't give the name."

"Do you believe that these two murders were committed by the same person?"

"Sorry, Inspector, "I'm not certain even of that."

The police superintendent, however, remained curious.

"Did you say, Major, you know who killed Patricia Fortier?"

"Not exactly that," Allenby corrected quietly, "but within the last few moments I have become reasonably certain."

"Good Lord, you don't say so! Who was it?"

NOTHING TO SAY

Allenby colored a little.

"If you don't mind I'd prefer to make no statement yet. You see, I'm not quite certain whether one person committed both crimes. To make an arrest now might spoil a clean slate."

"On the other hand a delay might be fatal—let the guilty person escape!"

The Superintendent looked unconvinced. "Even a good swimmer?"

"The glass is dropping like lead," Boyd added. "Besides, we're keeping a patrol boat ready on St. Catherine's beach."

"I'll concede you the point, Major," Tyson sighed, "provided the steps you're contemplating meet with my approval."

* * *

"Well, gentlemen, what luck did you have in locating Judy Fortier?"

Constable Lunt shifted his weight, looked uncomfortable.

"Go on, man, speak up," Superintendent Tyson's incisive voice directed.

"Well, sir, we located her—and we didn't."

Clip the Camera Clues

"Sir, after a lot of inquiry we discovered that Miss Fortier has been living with a Portuguese family near the border of Devonshire and Smith's Parish."

Inspector Boyd took up the account.

"The old fisherman couldn't even talk English and was very stupid. His wife was no better, so we found someone to translate.

"It turned out that these people found Miss Fortier lying exhausted and unconscious on their doorstep in the early morning of August 27th—the day after she was supposed to have committed suicide."

"I quite recall the date," remarked the Superintendent acidly. "Even Miss Fortier's photograph in the coroner's report."

"They said she appeared to have been badly beaten and bruised. She'd a nasty coral cut on her scalp and was out of her head for over ten days."

"Why didn't they notify the police?"

YOU CAN BE BEAUTIFUL

New Figure Glory in Five Days

DON'T EVER fool yourself into thinking the glorious figures that abound in Hollywood come from the wraith-like, dreamy existence of pampered beauties—they work and play hard, and gain weight even as you and I. Because the stars and starlets like Virginia Grey have to expend tremendous vitality in their screen work, it is in Hollywood that the diet has been perfected so that it slims down curves to lovely arcs, but leaves the owners with energy to burn. Arline Gould offers today a reducing diet which has been the standby of more stars than you'd believe possible.

Diet Out of Hollywood Will Stream-line Your Figure

By ARLINE GOULD

YOUR INTENTIONS about reducing for the past two months have been perfect, we know. But the follow-up has been nil. That we also know! And spring inevitably brings the day of reckoning, when you no more look like a Vertes lady in your new spring suit than Popeye would.

As a matter of fact, Popeye would probably set it off better than you do!

What actually gives you the screaming meanies is that summer and bathing suits are around the corner, and you'll die if you don't own a diaphragm-exposing suit with tiny sleeves on the bra, and minute pants. But what—in this state of things—will you look like?

We'll tell you. If you go on a Hollywood diet which we are tendering you right now with a happy smile on our face you'll not only be turned to perfection for the open season on beachcombers, but you'll devastate the gapers who line the highway for the Easter parade. Honest!

Five days is the length of the diet. During that time:

You'll never actually be hungry.

Your system will be spruced up so that your eyes will shine with health.

Though today you'd pass a flared, fitted satin lastex bathing suit by with lustreless, averted eye—after your five-day diet you'll go shopping for the town's best offering.

The marvelous part about this diet is that you can slide off it after five days for a period of perhaps two days—and then, if you're still a little off the ideal, go on it again for five more days.

Included in the leaflet with the Hollywood diet is a basic foundation reducing diet, with much the same results, which you can follow right through the ordinary course of your eating life. It shows the way to balanced dieting with a sufficient amount of protective foods, and gives a few tips that are worth days of haphazard cutting down on food.

If you'd like your copy of the five-day Hollywood diet, which has reshaped many a Hollywood figure and will whittle yours down for the spring and summer show-off seasons, write Arline Gould, Boston Evening American, and inclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Watch Posture

"Grace was in all her steps," wrote the poet. We're afraid few modern girls would merit that compliment. Most of them are lithe and slender but they lack the splendor and spirit of carriage that gives a woman distinction.

Keep the idea of good posture ever present in your mind. It will give you courage as well as health. Pull in your tummy muscles. Keep tall. Your chest will be high, arms will fall naturally and gracefully, the waist will tighten and look slim. If you throw the abdomen outward, the torso will fold down on itself. There will be a roll of flesh below the breasts, where the body should be flat.

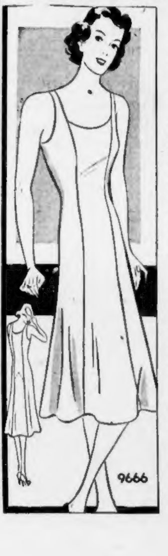
Flexible Back

When it comes to cultivating a charming figure, it is well to find out if you have a flexible back. Without it there cannot be grace of movement.

Throw the contents of the button box on the floor. Pick up each button, bending at the line of the hips, keeping the legs rigid. Back muscles will be strengthened in no time.

Here's a Perfect Slip

By MARIAN MARTIN



Every woman needs extra slips to carry her through the spring and summer and here is one which Marian Martin has designed to form the perfect foundation for your new sheer clothes.

Its simple Princess lines conform smoothly to the contours of your figure and are so cleverly shaped that they will not pull or twist. Note the narrow shoulder straps which are cut in one with the carefully shaped side panels . . . they won't slip no matter how active you are.

Pattern 9666 also provides for a shadow proof panel which you will need if you wear the slip with really thin summer dresses. Marian Martin Diagrammed Sew Chart is included."

Pattern 9666 may be ordered only in misses' and women's sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44. Size 16 requires 3¼ yards 39-inch fabric.

Send 15 cents in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for each Marian Martin pattern. Be sure to write plainly your size, name, address and style number.

Write for Marian Martin's new book of spring patterns. Better hurry, for you'll want a new printed frock to slip into on these first balmy days. This book is full of gay designs that will give you a lot of bright wardrobe ideas . . . for mornings, afternoons and parties.

Cunning clothes for little girls, too. Many of these styles are designed to carry you straight through the summer . . . and all of them are patterned for easy making at home.

Price of book 15 cents. Price of pattern 15 cents. Book and Pattern together 25 cents.

The Girl Who Had Seven Husbands

By ELSIE ROBINSON

(Copyright, 1938, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

She had seven husbands—at once. Didn't want them. Stayed, with some of them, only a night. Dreaded and fled from them all in time. Gave her heart to only one . . . and lived in a nightmare of remorse because of the rest. Yet still went on —and on—until—

Incredible? Yes—but true. Her name is Lillian Mondor. She's still young—only 26—and serving her term in a New York Penitentiary.

You'll find her story in the March 23 issue of "ACTUAL DETECTIVE STORIES OF WOMEN IN CRIME." I wish I could put that story into the hands of every bewildered American youngster . . . hear it released from American pulpits and broadcasting stations.

But why? Why should such a morbid case history be given to decent people?

BECAUSE THE IMPULSE WHICH DRAGGED THIS GIRL TO THE DEPTHS, MOVES IN ALL OF US . . . BETRAYING US ALL INTO SHAME AND AGONY.

She was a nice, clean, American kid . . . at thirteen, honor student at her school . . . two years later, the adoring wife of John Gordon and, presently, the devoted mother of his three babies.

From 1924 to 1933—nine years, seemingly filled with simple happiness and peace. Then one morning she kissed her little boy goodbye and, without even a farewell note to her husband, she went away—

Went away because she could no longer face the fact which had lain like a coiled snake in her heart all those years—the fact of her secret marriage to a wandering gypsy at 13.

Pitiful little story! Going to school, she'd seen his band, camped in a sandlot . . . hung around fascinated, as a child will. Been fascinated by his dancing . . . married him on impulse when the band moved on.

Then, when the campfires leaped and the wild singing of the wedding celebration began, terror had gripped her, she'd fled—returned to her parents' home at midnight, a wife in name only, with a secret she vowed never to tell.

"But how silly!" you cry. "That first marriage wasn't real . . . she was just a child. She could have had it annulled . . . it would have been so easy!"

Yes, I know—it always seems easy, LOOKING BACK. But it didn't seem easy—then. IT NEVER DOES.

Having yielded to one impulse, she quite naturally yielded to another. There was no solid, central plan in her life to which she could cling.

She simply went from one wobbling urge to another—until presently she was running . . . running . . . running from the consequences . . . like a child lost in a maze, always seeking—never finding—its way out.

She married seven men.

She married each new man because she was trying to forget the man who had gone before . . . trying to escape from the horror and regret of that original concealed act.

Changing jobs. Always seeking to escape from the old life . . . success in the new life. Never getting either

There are quotations, with Lillian Mondor's story, which explain that frantic search . . . explanations from Dr. R. V. Kraft Ebing, who knew more than any man on earth about twisted minds. Explanations which throw a terrific spotlight on your own life—and mine.

IF SHE COULD ONLY HAVE FACED THINGS AND CLEARED THINGS AS SHE WENT ALONG . . . LILLIAN MONDOR COULD HAVE BEEN SAVED.

Realizing—confessing—these are the processes by which sick souls are healed.

That is why the Catholic Church, in its wisdom, instituted CONFESSION.

I am not a Catholic—you may not be. BUT THE CONFESSIONAL IS GOOD MEDICINE.

Stop trying to escape your record. Face and clear it NOW. Tell your truth to some person—for their human nearness. To GOD—for His infinite power. Don't try to duck life any longer . . . IT CAN'T BE DONE.

Spruce Up Your Figure for Easter

By IDA JEAN KAIN

WHETHER you join the Easter parade along Fifth avenue or Main street, you must prune your curves to cut a fine figure in your smart new clothes.

Of course, you cannot take off that extra twenty pounds in a mere three weeks, but you can be six pounds slimmer and three inches trimmer by Easter. Just that much spring pruning can make you feel positively svelte!

Exercise will do more for your figure in a short time than diet. You probably need special exercises to take a double tuck in the waist, snip and inch or two off the hips and spruce up your posture . . . but let's find out. The tape will tell you the exact measurements that need trimming.

Let's begin with the waistline, for without a well-defined waistline no figure can be lovely. The waistline should be seven to nine inches less than the bust measurement, and if you have only a five-inch difference, two inches off can make you almost streamlined.

It is so easy to slim down the waistline that you will wonder why you ever let it wander. Stretching and twisting exercises pull and squeeze the waistline roll until there is nothing left but a slim middle. Here is one of the easiest of the stretching exercises:

Movement: Keeping the upper part of the back as flat as possible on the floor, cross the left leg over the right and touch the toes to the floor. This gives you a diagonal stretch. Now change position and cross the right leg over, having the right arm stretched overhead on floor. Repeat six times, changing position each time.

Rolling is the best emergency measure for smoothing and firming the hipline.

Roll from side to side, not over and over. Concentrate the pressure of the roll on the largest part of the hipline. For some figures the roll is most effective from a lying down position and for others from a half-sitting position. Roll on a blanket or thin mat on the floor. A hard surface does not yield to bulges and is better for the figure. To smooth out lumps on the side of hip and thigh, roll away over on the thighline, then back to the other thighline.

All the exercise in the world will not give your figure a good appearance unless you have a good posture. An erect posture helps you to look and feel inches slimmer. The one rule is to stand as tall as possible, pushing up with the top of your head. This stance automatically pulls the tummy up, lifts the chest and pulls your figure into beautiful line. Corrective exercise helps to improve your posture. So . . . get busy with your figure program if you want to be the fairest lady in the Easter parade!

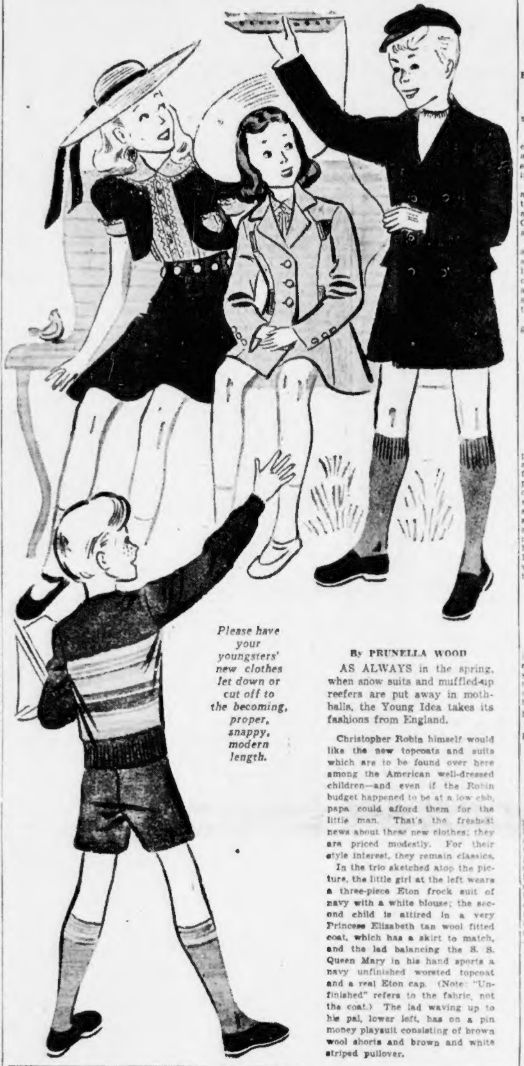
British Beau Brummels



Please have your youngsters' new clothes let down or cut off to the becoming, proper, snappy, modern length.

By PRUNELLA WOOD

AS ALWAYS in the spring, when snow suits and muffled-up reefers are put away in mothballs, the Young Idea takes its fashions from England.

Christopher Robin himself would like the new topcoats and suits which are to be found over here among the American well-dressed children—and even if the Robin budget happened to be at a low ebb, papa could afford them for the little man. That's the freshest news about these new clothes; they are priced modestly. For their style interest, they remain classics.

Should Boy and Girl Wed on $100 a Month?

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

A young man of 22 writes me a very manly straightforward letter, asking if he is too young to assume the responsibilities of married life on a salary of $100 a month.

There really isn't a set rule about either of these things. Some men are old enough to marry at 22, and others are too young at 50.

The same holds good as to incomes. Some couples could easily get along on $100 a month, with a comfortable margin left over for savings. Others would starve to death on that amount.

Doctors who specialize in the science of improving the human race say that the proper age for young people to marry is for women, around 22, and for men, around 25. At that time, the average man and woman reach mental and physical maturity.

In this exciting era, many parents are in favor of early marriages for their children, as they believe matrimony will have a steadying influence; that responsibility is better than life in a series of automobiles, and that a can of soup heated over the two-burner gas stove is better than a more substantial meal eaten at a roadhouse.

Such parents usually help out by providing an allowance which will enable the young folks to marry. And there's the question of inherited money which makes early marriage possible. But the all-important question is:

"How about the girl's thriftiness? Does she know how to save, how to keep house so that the dollar will increase and multiply into two?"

Alas, our foreign-born girls are more skillful at this sort of miracle—spreading one dollar over two—than are our American young women, who have grown up in a rich country where the art of peeling potatoes "thin" is thought to be stupid.

My correspondent who inquires whether 22 is too young to marry on $100 a month has not told me any of these details concerning his prospective bride.

I don't know whether his girl is foreign or American born, whether she knows how to keep house or not, whether he or she has any prospects, in the way of inherited money or the willingness of parents to help out.

My suggestion to him will depend on these things. WILL THE YOUNG MAN PLEASE WRITE AGAIN A LITTLE MORE FULLY?

And I would also like to hear from some of my OTHER correspondents as to their experience of early marriage, and whether they've seen my budget based on $25 a week for a family of four.

On the whole, it would seem that very early marriages are not advisable, because so many young folks write me that they married in their teens and discovered, after their tastes became more mature, that they had made mistakes.

What seems lovely and desirable at 19 or 20 may be utterly outgrown at 25 or 30.

Sad as it is, this is particularly true in the case of wives. They write me they are exactly the same person their husband chose, but the trouble is with the husband. HE HAS CHANGED.

All said and done, specialists in eugenics, or the science of improving the race, have the best of the argument perhaps, when they say 25 or over is the ideal marital age for men and 22 for women.

Fresh Vegetable Supplies Show Increase

FROM MARTHA LEE'S WEDNESDAY MORNING BROADCAST OVER WMEX

Put on your new spring bonnet and let's go to market!

The first thing that catches our eye is the large green bunches of asparagus. Yes it is rather expensive. Well—we will look at it longingly for another week or so.

These dandelion and beet greens are new. The market man says they are grown in our hot houses and the mustard greens are from California. Lets buy some of each and mix them together.

We simply can't resist these salad greens. Do you suppose the salad bowl will hold some scallions, radishes, escarole, watercress, chicory, lettuce, cucumber and tomatoes. A bowl of that assortment will certainly be a spring tonic for the family.

VEGETABLE PLATE

New Peas
Beets
1 or 2 dozen stalks asparagus
Pepper
Mashed potatoes
Tiny onions
New carrots
Salt
Parsley

Dice the carrots the size of the peas; cook the vegetables. When all are done, skin and dice the beets finely. Arrange the stalks of asparagus in a cross on a flat platter or chop plate, and place each vegetable, after seasoning well with salt, pepper and melted butter in a quarter—divisions formed by the asparagus. Place in the center a rosette of mashed potatoes, topped by a sprig of parsley. Four French lamb chops may be used for the dividing line ,if wished, making attractive one-piece meal.

LIMA BEANS

1 quart Lima beans
Enough water to cover
1 tablespoon butter
1 teaspoon butter
½ cup cream

Cover the Lima beans with boiling water and add the butter. Simmer for 15 minutes and add the salt. Cook over a good flame until the water has evaporated and then add the cream. Heat in the cream but do not let them boil.

STUFFED EGGPLANT SHELLS

2 eggplants weighing about one pound each
2 tablespoons butter, fat or oil
1½ cups boiling water
1 chopped green pepper
1 cup dry bread crumbs
1½ teaspoons salt
Dash of pepper
½ chopped onion

Cut out the inside of the eggplants, leaving a shell about one-half inch thick. Cook in boiling salted water five minutes. Saute the onion, pepper, and eggplant pulp, all chopped, in the fat for about 10 minutes. Then add the bread crumbs, boiling water and seasoning. Fill eggplant shells with this mixture, and sprinkle dry crumbs over the top. Place in a pan with a little water, and bake at 400 F. for one-half hour. Serves six.

Married Comrades

By ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER 567

ALLEN DRAKE'S question was directed impartially to both Harry and Dicky, but it was Mr. Underwood who answered.

"Right you are, sapient Uncle Chester," he said, and I was glad that Dicky had not uttered the gibe. From his lips I guessed that it would have been irritating to Allen Drake. But his response to Harry Underwood was a lazy grin.

"Then I'd like some advice," he said. "The chief's instructions were that I was to get out with my daughter—" he gave me a duplicate of the grin Harry Underwood had received—" for a drive as soon as possible. But, of course, the chief didn't know then of these birds on the hill and the necessity of staging the balcony scene we've been putting on. But how long do you think we have to keep that farce up?"

"Better wait until I get the report of the best trailer since the Indian scouts died off," Mr. Underwood said. "He's an old sidekick of mine, and I nearly burst my belt buttons with joy when I found that I could get him down here and set him to shadowing those men. If he's up to his usual form, he ought to have been able to get everything they've said, and a lot of what they've thought in the three days since I put him on the job.

Get His Report

"I'll get in contact with him just as soon as it's dark. We have some private signals, woods noises and sich, that would deceive much wilier birds than those on the hill. And I'll report the dope to you just as soon as I get it. Then it will be up to you. How sick have you been pretending to be?"

"Pretty weak," Mr. Drake responded. "How about it, Nurse?"

"In this weather," she said at last, "and if you were well wrapped up, you could go for a drive day after tomorrow. That will give us a chance to pretend that you are much better tomorrow. You can walk with very little support."

"Katie says your lunch is all ready," Jim said.

"And we haven't washed up after that nightmare of a trip! But we won't waste much time in the pursuit of the thing which is next to godliness. Tell Katie we'll be down in a minute, Jim."

Know Your Opponent

By Josephine Culbertson

Study the Bidding Tactics of All Players

The implications of an opponent's bid are vitally important to the player who ends up as declarer.

Obviously, however, unless one is familiar with the bidding style of a particular opponent, it is difficult to make the proper deductions from his bids.

It is for that reason that experts spend so much time appraising their opponents. Consider the "guess" which the declarer had to make in the following hand:

North-South vulnerable.
Match-point duplicate.

West	North	East
	♠ 8 ♡ J 9 7 5 4 ◇ K J 3 2 ♣ 9 6 4
♠ Q 10 5 ♡ 8 ◇ Q 10 9 8 7 ♣ A K Q 5	North West East South	♠ K 9 6 3 2 ♡ Q 10 ◇ A 5 ♣ J 8 3 2
	♠ A J 7 4 ♡ A K 6 3 2 ◇ 6 4 ♣ 10 7

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	2 ◇	Pass	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	4 ♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

West opened the king of clubs, followed with the queen and the ace. Declarer ruffed and drew the outstanding trumps. Now success or failure depended squarely on declarer's guess of the diamond suit.

He led the six toward dummy, praying that West would relieve his indecision by putting up the ace. But there was no such luck. West followed with the seven-spot

I fear that the impluse of many players would be to go right up with dummy's king on the assumption that West must have the ace to justify his over-call.

The declarer, however, did not take this view of the matter. He reflected that West had shown the A-K-Q of clubs and a singleton heart. Surely, he reasoned, if West had had the diamond ace also he would not have contented himself, particularly when not vulnerable, with a mere two diamond over-call.

Either he would have made a takeout double, or he would have found a rebid after South's two heart bid. The fact that he had not done either of these and that he had not doubled the final contract seemed sufficient proof that he could not hold the diamond ace.

On this sound reasoning declarer put in dummy's jack, and by so doing fulfilled the contract.

Scrub Nails

There's no need of worrying about cuticle cream dimming nail polish; it won't. But you must not put polish on a nail surface that is oily. Give the claws a good soapy scouring after removing the old varnish and before putting on the new coat.

Those Puddingers Rollic Society With Another Gay Show

By BETTY ALDEN

AFTER SEEING the Hasty Pudding show last year we decided that the directors of the 1938 revue would be hard put to it to find leading ladies as ravishing as Gaspar Bacon, Jr., and Arnett McKennan, who were prima donnas in that production . . . but the producers of this year's show, "So Proudly We Hail," have fooled us . . . and assembled a cast of equally fetching ladies who sweep across the stage of the Pudding clubhouse with as much (well . . . almost as much) feminine allure as Sally Rand, Mae West and the late Jean Harlow . . .

ALLOE PLIMPTON

The show had its first public performance last evening . . . following a grand premiere Monday for graduates only . . . and will be presented again this evening at the Pudding House, with performances tomorrow and Friday evenings at the Copley Theater . . .

"So Proudly We Hail" moves along breezily, with plenty of catchy tunes, a humorous plot and a variety of talent among its actors . . .

Briefly, the plot pokes satirical fun at that newly formed and sophisticated group called Cafe Society . . . This group becomes dissatisfied with New York, elects a big butter-and-egg-man (played by Ben Dillingham) to be its leader and organize a secession from the United States to form a separate monarchy . . . In pursuit of recognition from other countries they encounter all sorts of complications with Hitler and Mussolini (Joseph Coolidge and William Myrick) . . . kidnap Princess Elizabeth (Dave Rivinius) in the hope of attracting the attention of England and finally after breaking up a travesty on the League of Nations, decide to return to the United States and salute the stars and stripes forever . . .

Vinton Freedley, Jr., Ben Welles and Nat Benchley are largely responsible for the book and music, with Stanley Miller displaying a varied assortment of talents not only in composing, but singing several of the song hits himself . . . Stanley played the part of the hero who falls in love with the butter and egg man's daughter, played by Vinton Freedley, Jr. . . . Vint's portrayal of the winsome, dark-eyed heroine, was so convincing that he almost stopped the show a couple of times . . . In a blue lace evening gown, trimmed with such feminine fripperies as pink bows and ruffles, he rolled languid eyes and flashed such a come hither smile at the hero that it was hardly a surprise when a huge bouquet of flowers arrived at the end of the show as a tribute to his performance as the prima donna . . .

Real Surprise for Vincent Girls

THERE'S A VARIED ASSORTMENT of talent in the cast . . . what with Henry Stone performing hair raising stunts on his unicycle . . . Dave Rivinius and Peter Nicholas giving an exhibition of jump roping to swing music . . . and Marvin Scaife doing a throaty blues song a la Martha Raye and Ella Fitzgerald . . . and for those of you who haven't seen the show yet, don't forget to watch the shadow scene through the cellophane glasses which are handed out during intermission . . . we won't spoil the fun by describing it . . .

Everything from Cholly Knickerbocker, fashion shows and even the President, is cleverly lampooned . . . but the biggest surprise of all for the Vincent Club girls in the audience is the take-off of their famous drill . . . This comes in the finale when a large battalion of brightly clad guardsmen go through the exacting manoeuvers of a drill with accurate precision . . .

Alloe Plimpton was in the audience with her fiance, Alan Enos . . . and Lucy Pope arrived with Jack Somers . . .

Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel Clark hustled in just before curtain time and Olivia Peters attended with a group of friends . . . The Howard Wheelers sat near the front row where they couldn't miss a trick and Mrs. William Brace Pratt was way down front so as not to miss seeing her son, Peter, in his silken skirts and ridiculously feminine hats . . .

* * *

Priscilla Thorndike in Turquoise Velvet

JANE PLIMPTON was escorted by a Pudding member . . . and Connie Turner attended in a foursome with Polly Powers and the latter's fiance, Bill Kemble . . .

Priscilla Thorndike, who wore a beautiful gown of turquoise velvet with long tight sleeves and an orchid pinned on one shoulder, exclaimed, "Well!" when a pouty feminine character in the play was warned "not to act like a Vincent girl" . . . and when Francis Lawrence, who, as the heroine's modish mother having her photograph taken in a night club, exclaimed, "I feel just like a debutante," the girls in the audience simply rocked with laughter . . . Francis' makeup was very convincing, however . . . He did a good job in disguising himself as a social queen, and somehow the sleek satins and laces of his gowns didn't look too incongruous with his size eleven shoes and prominent biceps . . .

After the show the boys staged an impromptu cabaret and dance where everyone hummed the catchy tunes of the show . . . Jean Halladay was one of the debs there to add her bit to the warm applause, and Jean Gordon came in from Concord with two of the Swift girls . . . their colorful prints adding to the vivid scene as friends and families of the cast rushed upstairs to congratulate the players . . .

Mrs. Morton P. Prince was another enthusiastic member of the audience as were Miss Gertrude Sands, Mrs. William Endicott, Janet Forbes and Mrs. Gorham Brooks with her daughter, Violet.

Rosary Alumnae At Breakfast

A delightful musical program will be Mrs. Grace Keddy, music chairman, while Dorothy Cooney, committee chairman, will present the day's speaker in a lecture on missionary travels. Alumnae president, Catherine Howard, will preside as toastmaster.

Ushering has been detailed to Elizabeth McDonough of Watertown, Marion Imerney, Helen Ryan and Gertrude O'Donnell of Waltham and Mrs. Richard Robinson of Newton Centre.

Others include Elizabeth Lorden, Mrs. Frank Kelley of Belmont and Arthur Champagne of Belmont.

Attend Show, But Still Silent on Betrothal

MARJORIE BRADFORD NATHANIEL BENCHLEY

Miss Marjorie Bradford came on from Scarsdale N. Y. to attend the opening of the Hasty Pudding show, "So Proudly We Hail," last evening with Nathaniel Benchley, co-author of the show and son of the famous humorist, Robert Benchley of New York. During the past few days they have remained non-committal about the report that they would announce their engagement soon. Nat collaborated with Ben Welles and John Graham in writing the book for the show.

Bridal

Newton Girl Weds Army Officer

Miss Alice D. Parkin, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Edwin Harris Parkin of Newton Center, became the bride of Lieutenant S. Fred Cummings, Jr., U. S. A., at a small wedding at noon today.

The ceremony, which was attended by the immediate families of the bridal couple only, was performed at the home of the bride's parents by Dr. Edward Sullivan of Trinity Episcopal Church, Newton Center. Dr. Parkin gave his daughter in marriage.

The bride wore a lovely gown of rose point lace, clouded with a tulle veil which fell from a lace Juliet cap, and she carried a bouquet of calla lilies. The maid of honor was Miss Justina Cummings, of Chicago, sister of the bridegroom, who wore a gown of rose chiffon with a matching hat and a bouquet of blue delphium and rose snapdragon.

The bride's younger sister, Mary Louise Parkin, was bridesmaid. Her frock was fashioned of green organdie and she carried a boquet of white sweet peas.

The bride was graduated from Goucher College in 1937 and is also a graduate of Katherine Gibbs School. She is a member of the national fraternity of Pi Beta Phi.

Lieut. Cummings attended the University of Illinois and West Point from which he graduated in 1935. He will take his bride to Fort Benning, Ga., where he is now stationed.

Regis Juniors Make Plans For Week

Spirits of Regis College juniors are being buoyed up throughout the Lenten season with the many gay plans for junior week at the college, the last of April.

The bridge and tea, at which members of the class of 1939 will entertain their mothers, will usher in the gay round of festivities. The affair is scheduled for April 25 with Margaret Landers of Lawrence as chairman.

Helping her with plans for refreshments, musicale and decorations are Frances Quinn of Lawrence, Joan Knight of Woodsville, Catherine Farley of Dover, N. H., Sally Boskett of Lawrence and Regina Murray of West Roxbury.

The week's merriment on the Weston campus will be climaxed with the staging of the promenade on Friday evening in the marble foyer of the main building.

Saturday afternoon the curtain will fall on the activities with a tea dance in the same spot. Rhythmic music for both occasions is being chosen by Margaret Foley of Watertown whose aides include Elizabeth Boylan of Newton Center, Rita Feeley of Brookline, Mary O'Donoghue of Arlington and Virginia Higgins of Winthrop.

Overseer of all of the week's gayeties Elinore Corbett of Brookline the week's chairman.

Society Notes

Puddingers Satire New Deal, Dictators

It is almost a rule at Harvard that the Hasty Pudding Club should produce the most finished and professional-appearing shows that the university can offer; and it is good to see that "So Proudly We Hail," which opened at the Pudding clubhouse last night, is no exception to that rule.

This is not to say that the play has no faults, but there are more than enough bright spots in the show to make it well worth your attendance.

A satire on the New Deal administration, European dictatorships, and minor subjects like women's styles and the manners of the Riviera, it has an abundance of color and music to offer. Truly, it might almost as well be called a musical comedy as a satire, for the satire is only incidental, and by no means bitter.

As the play opens, C. Wellington Peasley, a social lion, decides, with a few of his friends, that New Deal taxes cannot be borne any longer. So they plan to secede from the Union, forming a little independent state in the heart of New York City. This new state is called Cafeteria, and is to be the fatherland of gentlemen of the leisure class who find obnoxious the rule: "One for me and four for Franklin."

Complications develop, since the new state needs military support. Wellington Peasley, newly crowned king, takes his suit to Hitler and Mussolini.

The result is a fistful of trouble when Mussolini and De Fuhrer threaten to annex the new country. Finally, after many pleas, Cafeteria is accepted back into the Union, and all ends happily with the moral that American government may be bad, but it is still a lot better than the European variety.

Love interest is supplied when the hero, Kenneth Conway, falls in love with King Peasley's daughter, loses her through the intrigues of the dark and dangerous Countess Castlebgni, and in the end wins her hand again.

And, of course, strung up in this slight web are a number of variety acts, all of which come off successfully. There are a unicycle rider, a novel marching-drill number, a three-dimensional pantomime to be viewed through special glasses, and a tumbling act.

* * *

Outstanding performances are given by Benjamin Dillingham, son of the great Hawaiian industrial family, as King Peasley; by William W. Myrick as Hitler and Joseph R. Coolidge as Mussolini; by R. Bennett Forbes as the radio voice of Franklin Roosevelt; and by Vinton Freedley, Jr., son of the famed New York producer, as Joan Peasley.

The music of the show, written by Stanley Miller, Alan Lerner, and Ben Welles II, is generally good, thought there are only two tunes which seem destined to make the airways. They are "A Chance to Dream" and "Man About Town." The dancing is shown at best advantage in the marching drill finale.

Costumes by Bettie Kern and scenery by Alphonso Ossorio are excellently done and decidedly professional in appearance. Opening and closing scenes are notable for color and design.

The script by Benjamin Welles II, Nat Benchley and John M. Graham is well written and handled with commendable restraint.

The show will play at the clubhouse in Cambridge tonight, moving to the Copley Theater in Boston for two performances, Thursday and Friday and taking a one-day stand at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York on April 8—R. Tregaskis.

Three Lectures Feature Club Calendar

Lectures seem to be the most popular form of mid-Lenten diversion with three organizations continuing their series of lectures on salient subjects tomorrow evening.

The Spanish situation is the topic to be discussed at the free lecture which the State Court of the Catholic Daughters of America is holding at St. Clement's Church, Boylston street.

Mrs. Thomas G. Murphy, state secretary, is serving as chairman. Rt. Rev. Joseph McGlinchey, state chaplain, heads the sponsors group which also includes Mrs. James H. Murray, state regent and Mrs. John V. Ballard, national director.

Philomatheia Juniors Sponsor Marriage Lectures

Mary Clarissa McCarthy, committee chairman, is assisted by Dorothy Winslow Crannell, Catherine Egan, Catherine Curley, Rosamond Adams, Frances O'Halloran, Elizabeth Chisholm and Geraldine Soles.

A SLAM ABOUT THOSE RADIO SLAMS

In a letter illustrated with one of her familiar caricatures Edith Stevens submits a letter that speaks soundly for itself:

"Hooray for you for spearing radio's 'triple' name-calling. Now won't you please go after the door opening and slamming. You know—(Door Opens and Slams Shut): 'Well, look who's here!' or (Door Opens and Bangs-To) 'Why hello if it isn't Blinky Toad folks!' (Applause) followed in a while by 'Scram outa here!' (Door Slam Bangs).

"After years of listening to door bits and such I wait for a program with a door to open with a good old squeak and close with a long high squeal. Or better still maybe the door-knob could drop off with a good loud clatter. Or even better have the door locked and the key lost and have someone rattle the knob for a few seconds and then yell their jokes (!) through the closed portal. I don't mean to be too harsh, but don't you think something should be done about this radio door business?" The answer is, "Yes, Edith. Yes, indeed."

ONCE OVER LIGHTLY

Friends of School Committeeman Frederick R. Sullivan are determined that he run for state treasurer and Frederick R. is giving it much thought . . . Jean Arthur's difference with her studio has been adjusted.

Lieutenant Governor Francis E. Kelly started north from Miami Beach this morning . . . Mrs. Kelly is improved in health. They will stop at Washington, where city editors who may still be interested in the "Dr. Williams incident" may get a first-hand denial of the entire episode by phoning the Mayflower Hotel . . . A week-end in New York and at his desk Monday morning is the lieutenant-governor's present plan.

Agnes M. Shaw, drama coach at Revere high, will give a public concert at Steinert Hall, April 27 . . . Miss Shaw is a mezzo . . . Judge Frankland Miles, whose official announcement for his G. O. P. gubernatorial candidacy should be forthcoming soon, is campaigning more actively than any candidate in the coming balloting. Since Labor Day the Roxbury jurist has been averaging two speeches a day in cities and towns throughout the Commonwealth.

Junior U. S. Commissioner Howard W. Robbins is pinch-hitting for Commissioner Harry N. Guterman while the senior arbiter is enjoying the tropics . . . Chief Postal Inspector John J. Breslin is back at work after a week's tussle with the grip . . . An intensive investigation is under way by federal agents of an extensive local auto-theft ring.

A friend of Senator P. Eugene Casey of Milford has composed a letter of praise about the senator which borders on being a philippic . . . Rose Chapman, in her first major bid as nightclub operator, came up with a hit in The Congo.

Reinhardt Benefit Lauded

Luise Rainer Heads Stars Rallying to Aid Refugees

(Copyright, 1938, by International News Service)

HOLLYWOOD, March 30—Luise Rainer is the very first of the Hollywood actresses to volunteer her services to Max Reinhardt for his stage presentation of Pirandello's "Six Characters in Search of an Author."

Professor Reinhardt will turn over the proceeds to Austrian refugees of the theatrical profession.

Louella O. Parsons

Luise studied with Professor Reinhardt in Europe, and she expressed herself as being glad to head the cast of this benefit which from an artistic standpoint should be an outstanding event.

Luise is only one of an impressive list of Hollywood stars who have assured Professor Reinhardt of their eagerness to help. Francis Lederer, Joseph Schildkraut and [illegible] have important roles. Mrs. Reinhardt, who was Helene Thimig, one of Europe's finest actresses, is playing the mother role. It is a big part but accepted by Mrs. Reinhardt so that she might do her bit. A theater will probably be donated and it is Professor Reinhardt's idea to produce the Pirandello play in German.

Interesting to Hollywood is the word that Joan Bennett will be starred in "Mother Cary's Chickens."

Wonder what happened to Ginger Rogers? A year ago the Rogers girl took tests, read the script of the Kate Douglas Wiggin story and there was a great hurrah about it being her first solo starring part. Even a starting date was announced with Dorothy Arzner set to direct her. Then, for some unexplained reason we heard no more of "Mother Cary's Chickens."

Whether or not it was too dramatic for the dancing star I do not know but I do know that Joan will have the top feminine role as soon as she finishes "The Texans" and that she will have with her Anne Shirley in the second and that the director, Rowland V. Lee, megaphoning.

A line or two: Very secretly and any day now, Howard Hughes is taking off with a specially built plane with only a co-pilot accompanying him, to attempt to break 'round the world air record . . . So don't say we didn't tell you when it lands in headlines.

Met Stars Excel In 'La Boheme' Performance

By RUTH MARSTERS

Audiences that have filled the Boston Opera House for each performance of the Metropolitan Opera Company's current engagement have been amused according to their ilk.

They have been [illegible] thrilled by Wagner, Verdi, Mozart. [illegible] remained for La Boheme to rouse them to that [illegible] of agreement [illegible] known as [illegible]. The reasons for this [illegible] as [illegible].

Secondly there is the music of Puccini lavishly sprinkled with arias of delightful substance and colored throughout by light whimsicality that is not strained at encompassing the pathetic, the gay, the romantic, in quick succession.

As Mimi, Bidu Sayao, the [illegible] young Brazilian [illegible] the Metropolitan last season, was most effective. [illegible]

Jan Kiepura, the often spoken of new tenor this season, contributed his talents to the part of Rodolfo with enthusiasm.

The diminutive Natalie Bodanya was a gay and naughty Musetta.

Scenery for La Boheme was fair enough—not much is demanded in sets here. The orchestra, conducted by Gennaro Papi, was a more or less sympathetic support to the singers.

But it was Manager Edward Johnson's policy of having singers look plausible in the role when possible that was in the end responsible for much of the success of the production.

CCC Will Hold 'Open House'

Civilian Conservation Corps camps throughout the First Corps Area in New England will hold 'open house' during the week of March 31 to April [illegible] to observe the fifth anniversary of the CCC program.

During the past five years more than 65,000 Massachusetts youths have received employment in the camps, stated Mrs. Lauretta Bresnahan, state selecting agent. The two camps near Boston are 1149 Company at Me[illegible] and [illegible] Company at North Reading.

Nearly 5000 Massachusetts boys are now enrolled in the CCC, Mrs. Bresnahan said. During the organization's five years of operation $14,000,000 in earnings has been sent to Massachusetts homes, she added.

Damon Runyon

NEW YORK, March 30—Us cash customers of the cinema have learned that Hollywood has a new name for what [illegible] Hollywood name is cycle.

Now and then a producer or director or a writer or whoever it is that has ideas out in Hollywood conceives a reasonably fresh and perhaps novel idea for a picture that turns out to be a big hit.

Immediately and [illegible] often in better time than that, practically all the other producers and directors and authors in Hollywood are as busy as as many little cranberry merchants fashioning pictures on the same identical lines as the hit.

Presently the world is chock-a-block with patterns of the hit, and the result is greatly bewildering to us cash customers. We pay out good dough to see what we are told is a brand new picture, and colossal at that, and out pops the hit picture we saw weeks before, only with different actors.

The dialogue and the situations may be slightly altered, but this is probably just a precaution against charges of downright plagiarism.

In a general way, the so-called new picture will be so much like the hit that if the originators of the latter were marketing their own style of sausage or breakfast food and something so closely imitative appeared they could sue for infringement of copyright and probably get judgment.

It is a cycle. We have learned that this nice little word makes permissable in Hollywood a practice that in some circles might be deemed larceny, petty, or otherwise.

PERPLEXES CUSTOMERS

The cycling, or imitative strain in Hollywood perplexes us cash customers because we have been under the impression that much of the literary genius of the world has been assembled out there at great cost and we expect literary genius to be at least original.

We look for more from literary geniuses than green stories that keep us thinking that this was where we came in.

Of course it may be that the producers and directors are more to blame for the cycling than literary genius, especially the producers.

It may be that the producers sniffing the box office returns of us cash customers to a hit picture turned out by some rival, issue loud screams for their own literary genius and demand a picture like that, or else. And who is literary genius to look his bread and butter in the mouth?

PITY THE ORIGINATORS

Thus it all goes back to us cash customers. We sow the box office returns and we reap the cycles or imitations. In short, we make it tough on ourself.

The fellow we feel sorry for is the originator of the idea on which the hit picture is founded. If, instead of thinking up a new idea for a picture he had devoted his talent to inventing a non-skid upper plate or something equally useful and taken out a patent thereon, his idea would be fully protected by law.

No one, except perhaps a smart lawyer, could take it away from him.

If he had some way of protecting his pattern against being cycled he could go on for years on that one pattern. It would be a valuable asset to him, whether he be a producer, director, or author.

READ THE RULES—IMPORTANT!

CROSS-O-GRAMS consist of seven diagrams, published in the Sunday Advertiser of March 27 and through the week day Boston Evening American to Saturday, April 2nd inclusive. These seven constitute ONE SET and the LOW SCORE TOTALS are eligible for the CASH AWARDS each week.

SOLVE ALL SEVEN and mail as a complete set to be postmarked First Class Mail not later than midnight of Wednesday, April 6th for the first set. Midnight of April 13th is the postmark deadline for the second set of solutions.

Remember there are two separate sets of CROSS-O-GRAMS—TWO WEEKLY CONTESTS—$125 CASH EACH WEEK.

This contest is open to all bona fide residents of New England except employes of the Boston Sunday Advertiser, the Boston Evening American or other Hearst newspapers and magazines or their families or relatives.

Send your set of seven solutions to CROSS-O-GRAMS EDITOR, the Boston Evening American, 5 Winthrop Square, Boston, Mass.

Send your letter with your signature, name and address to accompany your entry, with a statement of not more than 50 words on "The Feature I Like Best in the Boston Evening American—and Why." This is IMPORTANT.

Your statement will be considered only in the case of ties in the scoring when your seven CROSS-O-GRAMS have been completed.

Prizes in Cash as set forth will be paid to the person filing the lowest score figured by the use of letters as indicated in the table and their valuation.

Each letter represents a given score and to score low persons should use letters to build words that will total the lowest possible score.

Fill in your total score every day. On the final CROSS-O-GRAM place your TOTAL SCORE for the seven daily entries. You may be high on one or two of the first days and then subsequently lower your score in the concluding days.

Entries will be judged by a committee chosen by the Boston Evening American. All entrants agree that the judges' decision must be final. You must use the CROSS-O-GRAMS diagram published in the Boston Sunday Advertiser and Boston Evening American, or a reasonably accurate facsimile.

Remember five words to be set forth in the CROSS-O-GRAMS each day must be selected from designated Boston Evening American features for that day as indicated with the diagram.

Workers in the Greater Boston United Jewish Campaign to raise funds for refugees in foreign countries reported progress today as they prepared for their second "report" luncheon Friday noon at the Chamber of Commerce Lounge.

Samuel Markell, chairman of the drive, stated that members of the 14 cooperating Jewish agencies in Boston were showing "splendid unity."

Dr. Joachim Prinz, refugee rabbi of Berlin, told workers at yesterday's report luncheon that the "fate of Austrian Jewry will be the fate of German Jewry" as the result of the Nazis invasion of Austria.

"The news that the American government has issued an appeal to the world in behalf of the oppressed refugees is stirring," Dr. Prinz said.

"But the American government cannot help alone, and the Jewish problem cannot be solved by the League of Nations. To be victorious, even when we are thought doomed, we must stand united and together."

Says Labor Case A 'Witch Hunt'

Fore River CIO Chief Quizzed on God

His belief in God was challenged when Lucien Koch, CIO organizer for the Fore River and East Boston yards of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, testified before Trial Examiner H. D. Schmidt of the National Labor Relations Board today.

Bruce Bromley, counsel for the Bethlehem company, charged that Koch, one-time president of Commonwealth College at Mena, Ark., testified at one time in Arkansas that he did not believe in God.

"What is this—a witch hunt?" Attorney Samuel Angoff, CIO counsel, demanded.

Bromley replied that he was attacking Koch's credibility as a witness. Koch, he pointed out, took the usual oath to tell the truth in the present case, but if it could be shown he did not believe in God, he, Bromley, contended, the oath would be shown to be meaningless.

"But I do believe in God," Koch declared on the stand.

Bromley then demanded to know whether it was not true that Commonwealth College taught Communism and that "the principal contributor to the college was the Garland Free Love Fund."

Revival of religion and Christian unity in all nations were termed the only sure remedies for conflicts between nations by Right Rev. G. Ashton Oldham, bishop of Albany, now visiting Boston.

"Political opposition has driven Christianity out of country after country. National ideologies are being substituted for the worship of the true God."

Asserting that a united church would help bring harmony to divided peoples, Bishop Oldham asked:

"How can we preach to the nations that they should compose their differences and live together in peace and harmony, when we ourselves are unable in our own limited sphere to heal our own divisions?"

New Crisis In French Finances

Drastic Measures to Be Sought by Leaders Over Week End

By HUGH E. BRADSHAW

Sometimes the oversigned inclines to the belief that we are so close to domestic markets that we can't see or understand the possibility of bearish foreign influences contributing their bit to the cause of lower prices. The present situation in France is such that liquidation here is only normal, even though it irritates an already weak situation.

A short while back we noted the uncertain status of French finances and pointed out that an increase in the treasury's borrowing limit from the Bank of France would be needed. Such a step is not to the liking of those concerned with the country's internal economy and is in fact viewed as a confession of weakness. Now we have word from Paris that the government will offer for approval of Parliament this week new financial measures. That these will be drastic is implied by the semi-official announcement they will not be presented until after the close of the markets on Friday and the Chamber and Senate will be kept in constant session until Monday in the hope that when the markets reopen they will have been enacted into law.

• • •

One of the principal fears of French investors is that the government will take steps to establish rigid control over holdings of foreign securities with the purpose of halting tax evasion. Reflection of this fear is seen in the recent persistent heaviness of "internationals" on the Paris Bourse. Then there is selling of foreign holdings to protect home investments affected by the fall of French security prices due to the internal financial unsettlement. It all adds up to make a depressing factor unconnected with our trouble here at home.

• • •

THE POWER SQUABBLE

The impression that the squabble over TVA power administration will ultimately be of great benefit to the utility industry is steadily gaining ground. It is pointed out that a congressional investigation will not only slow down new legislation and appropriations for similar projects but that it will afford an insight into the workings of government power plans. This latter is of the utmost importance in that it will supply a side of the picture of which the public knows little if anything. Up to now the sentimental issues surrounding power has been fine political propaganda but once the whole scene is unfolded public ideas may change.

• • •

Government entry into the power business is made under the guise of flood control and it may be something of a shock for the man-in-the-street to discover just how much is spent, not for flood control or similar preventitive purposes, but solely for power development. Not only that, but expenditures for power facilities may be found to have reached huge proportions in comparison with private outlays for similar works.

• • •

RALLY HOPE WANES

The persistent squelching of rally hopes has led to a feeling of utter despondency in brokerage circles. There are few with the temerity to even vision an upturn of decent proportions. Picking the starting points for such technical reversals has always been risky business and the rewards far outweighted by the chances that must be taken. That is one reason why we confine ourselves to simply pointing out likely support areas in preference to making buying recommendations. And recent experience proves the worth of the policy.

• • •

However, the chances are that after such a steep decline a fair sized rally is much closer than a further slump of consequence. If it happens that a base of 3 to 5 sessions builds up we will expect such an upturn to do rather well and will suggest a few special trading purchases. But there is not thought of long term accumulation as yet.

Market Erratic, Nervous Affair

Prices Mixed After Early Rally

NEW YORK, March 30—Stocks generally got back on the rallying trail today but the going was made difficult by profit taking on a morning bulge running to a point or so for recently shaky leaders.

Demand was broadest in the first hour when, for a time, the ticker tape lagged 2 minutes behind floor transactions. Dumping of impaired margin accounts before noon occasioned a temporary dip in which a number of issues touched new bottoms since 1933 and 1932. Fresh support then appeared and the climb was resumed. Top marks were reduced substantially or canceled here and there near the final hour.

BONDS IRREGULAR

Bonds and commodities were mixed, with the latter mostly lower. Foreign securities markets did better, and the principal European currencies slipped in terms of the dollar, apparently reflecting the drying up of offerings of American stocks from abroad. The domestic and London silver quotations were unchanged.

Brokers saw no especially cheering change in the news picture and were inclined to attribute the more hopeful action of shares mainly to quick-turn speculative forces who thought the list may have been oversold yesterday and was due to retrace at least part of the ground, even if hte basic trend is to continue downward.

RAILS AIDED

Rails were bolstered by thoughts the President's forthcoming message to Congress on relief for transportation systems would propose a constructive federal program. At the same time it was learned class 1 roads in February suffered an operating deficit of more than $2,000,000, the first for this month since 1921. In February last year net operating income aggregated nearly $39,000,000 and in 1930 it topped $58,000,000.

The French political and discal scene was still a complicating market influence as Premier Blum threatened to close the Paris Bourse next week if his financial recommendations are not passed by parliament.

That Wall street has been "taking it on the chin" was exemplified by the sale of a stock exchange membership for $52,000, off $3000 from a transfer effected Tuesday at a new 20-year low.

How Roosevelt Victories Cut Values, Work

By B. C. FORBES

Each Roosevelt "victory" is followed by further loss in the market value of the savings many millions of individuals and families have invested in employment-giving securities.

It was so again yesterday. The Senate's endorsement of the bill clothing President Roosevelt with more power over government agencies, over administration of government, was held responsible for the throwing over of securities at quotations which reached the lowest depths in recent years. Both bonds and stocks suffered.

Some people still harbor the childish notion that what happens in Wall Street affects only a lot of gamblers and speculators, that it has no effect upon the life of the people throughout the nation.

The fact is that the total number of stockholders and bondholders is equal to half the total number of families in the Union.

When this occurs on a very wide scale, the result is dwindling consumption, dwindling retail trade, dwindling industry, dwindling railway earnings, dwindling profits, dwindling dividends and, most serious of all, dwindling employment.

MARKET VALUES DROP

The market value of the stocks dealt in on the New York Stock Exchange alone has dropped upwards of $30,000,000,000 in the last twelve months.

The fall in bonds, similarly computed—that is, by multiplying the decrease in the price of each share or bond by the total number outstanding—has represented a further loss of some $6,000,000,000.

That combined total, $36,000,000,000, is almost three times America's gigantic stock of gold, equals almost six times the total amount of money in circulation in this country.

Supposed you owned at this time last year stocks or bonds which you could sell for $5000. You would have felt, and you had a right to feel, that your investments were worth $5000.

The withering of security values has been so severe that the chances are your $5000 worth has been cut in two, that you could not realize more than $2500 for what you could have sold for $5000 a year ago.

HOME BUILDING

We hear much about prospective home-building. It takes no super human intelligence to grasp that an individual or a family having a nest-egg of $5000 in securities would be far more disposed to shoulder the expense and responsibility of acquiring a home than would that same individual or family when they found themselves possessing only half their former reserve.

Likewise such individuals or families would logically be disposed to exercise conservatism in other directions, to curtail expenditures for all but sheer necessities.

The halving of their investment possessions has been suffered by millions all over the land.

That the effect has not been confined to a lot of Wall Street gamblers is convincingly reflected by what has been happening in every corner of the continent—declining trade, declining manufacturing, declining earnings in practically every industry, declining dividends, declining employment, and an increasing number of bankruptcies.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, I see the ray of hope: "Roosevelt victories" in Congress, which have been becoming fewer and fewer, seem likely to become still fewer judging by the growing number of Democratic lawmaker who no longer hesitate to come out in opposition to White House proposals which they deem undesirable, unhealthy.

State Lottery Advocates Offer Panacea

AUSTEN LAKE

DURING THE PAST FEW MONTHS this pillar has drawn much mail suggesting that the tax burdens of the citizens of Boston and the Commonwealth are sure to grow steadily worse before getting any better, and, therefore, a state-operated lottery is inevitable—so why not now? These advocates move on the theory that the people hereabouts are busy gambling, both lawfully and otherwise, and in some cases are taking a pretty brutal tossing around by the numbers pool, sweepstakes and bootleg bookmakers. They think it is time to be candid about our sins and, as long as a portion of the public wishes to gallop its funds, the state is in position to do the job more mercifully than the irresponsible types, of which many are notorious no-goods, who have been doing it for years.

This is the familiar argument which was advanced by the repeal advocates during the years of prohibition, when the thirsty people were deprived of nourishing bottle goods, but nevertheless irrigated themselves with sheep dip, nickel polish and the cruder stimulants which were smuggled in under the cover of darkness and sold in the blind-pigs at $1 the standard nip, peck and sniff. The repealers said that the people would drink, despite government tongue-clucking, and that the only benefits from prohibition were to the weasel characters who grew fabulously rich by poisoning the people.

Ely Placed Take at 200,000 G's

THERE WERE, NO DOUBT, SOME conscientious bootleggers during prohibition who took pride in the wholesomeness of their hootch. But for one of these there must have been 10 or even 100 who clipped the trade with phoney labels, corrosives and bathtub mixture. But heinous or honest the government denied itself much taxes by pretending this was a nation of abstainers, or, if it wasn't, would be as soon as the current generation forgot the taste of alcohol and took permanently to sugar pop.

History shows us that the government finally realized the futility of legislating boisterous waters out of the lives of the citizens. Besides at the moment the government was scraping the bottom of the barrel and spending its earnings way into the future. So it gave the people back its booze, took a big bite of the profits and everybody was happy—except, of course, the bootleggers.

The state seems a percentage off the racetrack betters each summer but denies itself the bigger scoop in the illicit trade which goes on the year around and which is estimated at above $[illegible]000,000. At least when he jumped over the political [illegible]board a few years back, Joe Ely stated that the nightly gambling soaked up $200,000,000 a year from the Massachusetts citizens. Whatever the sum may be it is huge and only a small part ever leaks back to the original investors and none goes to the state.

I HAVE HEARD IT COMPUTED BY RELIABLE authorities that the annual amounts sunk in the Irish and Canadian sweeps, not to mention the Cuban, Luxembourg, French Riviera, Lichtenstein, and other minor league lotteries which are hawked hereabouts, runs to $10,000,000 in Boston alone. The same authority guesses that one-sixth of the sum reaches the proper charities or private sponsors and the rest trickles into the pockets of chiselers who distribute phonies with no overhead except the commissions paid to their vendors.

In many cases the agents who peddle the fakes are innocent, believing that they are helping a worthy cause and turning back their collections faithfully. Too late when their stubs fail to check back, do they discover the check. Due to tolerance by the authorities, who often ignore the Sweeps sale for the sake of the Cinderella dream it gives the purchasers, including the rich and young as well as the poor and aged, the counterfeiters operate on the same plane of indulgence as the honest agents. Both flourish behind a screen of sentiment.

Nevada the Scarlet Sister

IT MAY BE, AS THE STATE-LOTTERY advocates say, that Massachusetts and other commonwealths of the country will resort to spinning-the-wheel when it has exhausted all other means of picking the public purse. Expediency has caused the statesmen to pare their scruples before now. Indeed three years ago some of the Beacon Hill fathers tried to crowd a lottery measure down the public gullet, somewhat as a French pate de foie gras manufacturer stuffs corn into a goose for the sake of enlarging its liver and producing a marketable paste. This, of course, makes the goose very sick so that ultimately it is happy to lie down and die.

The only state in the Union which now legalizes gambling other than that conducted on the horse and dog tracks is Nevada, which is a little more candid about its sins and therefore more honorable about them. Nevada enjoys a reputation of being the scarlet sister in the Union

I do not think my local lottery advocates want Massachusetts to join the scarlet sisterhood. But they seem to think that a frank game, under official supervision would dry up bootleg gambling, stop the flow of out-patient money, reduce the tax swelling and legalize that feeling of fuzz on the tongue, intestinal twitters and abdominal flutters. They say the state could furnish finer fuzz, twitters and flutters, at less risk to the buyer.

Boston's Sadness Just So Much Joy to These Leafs

Drillon's Disease Fatal to Bruins; Broda Like Man With Bee in Bosom

Owners Lose $40,000 As Series Ends Abruptly

By AUSTEN LAKE

Still to their credit, the Bruins prolonged their hockey season 10 minutes and 2 seconds last evening at the Garden before succumbing to Drillon's disease, which is an acute form of indigestion from over-eating rubber.

Th[illegible] was like being hit with a [illegible] and when the [illegible] three Cup games [illegible] handed [illegible] the Boston hockey [illegible] dynamite crackers [illegible] and [illegible] sate sleeping with nary a whoop.

There was nothing to whoop about.

And today, my friends, the gamblin' men of our town, who had offered 100 to 20 on the bland assumption that Uncle Arthur's boys could not lose three straight games, are poulticing their pocketbooks.

The Bruins not only could, but did, lose a third straight hockey game. Not only that, but the short-lived series cost the two contending hockey firms about $40,000 in unborn profits.

Yes, the Toronto Maple Leafs won 3 to 2 in the eleventh minute of the overtime after an evening of [illegible] toward the end [illegible] in hockey. And today, under their plaster and liniment, the attitude of the Bruins is that of a small boy who didn't eat his spinach and therefore cannot expect favors from lady luck.

LUCK WITH VISITORS

It is just as well the season ended for the Bruins [illegible] frame of mind [illegible] one of the ladies remarked, he guessed the puck would have to be garnished with sprigs of parsley and lemon wedges and laid on the lip of the Toronto goal before they could stuff it in. They did everything but tee it up.

Last night Boston saw a sample of the delirium-tremens which has been taking place on intermittent nights since last Thursday in Toronto, and which that antiquarian of the game, Eddie Shore, vows has been the stiffest set of play-offs it has been his misfortune to have played.

It was another case of driving some grand tee shots and some fine seconds and then three-putting.

As on last Saturday night the Bruins attacked with 4 and sometimes a 5-man formation and often had the Maple Leafs so busy fending and hacking with their hockeys they couldn't realize that down the ice was as clear as a baby's conscience.

BRODA INVINCIBLE

The [illegible] Turk Broda [illegible] a perfect [illegible] and a kindly Providence combined to keep all but three shots out of his basket during this series—one of which was very now-I wonder-[illegible].

Sometimes last evening, the old Turkey just flopped down on his portly middle and lay on top of the puck like he was a hatching hen. Sometimes he had it under his capacious armpits. Sometimes he just reclined in a dying swan across the mouth of the goal and let the Bruins tickle his stomach with their sticks.

And after the game, when he undressed, he had marks on his brisket as though he had been spanked with a waffle iron. I caught him in the showerbath fumbling among his abdominal wrinkles in the suspicion that one or more of the dozen pucks lost during the evening might have become imbedded subcutaneously in his suet. He ought to be X-rayed.

I [illegible] It was [illegible] dropped his first and last goals.

HARD ON FANS

The first came 1 minute and 16 seconds after the start of the second period when he prowled around Jack Portland and fired right into the whites of Thompson's eyes.

Tiny couldn't even yoo-hoo with [illegible] as it went by—phutt! [illegible] that phutt! And [illegible] a hospital [illegible] out of ether.

W[illegible] later in that frame [illegible] Charley Sands, Ray Getliffe [illegible] were [illegible] around the Toronto net [illegible] when Sands dished one over and Crowley stuffed it in the ballot box. So, the Glorious 4th broke loose with firecrackers, cow gongs, fishhorns and newspaper confetti.

The American Legion band tootled and the Bruin brothers hammered their heroes' backs and you might have thought U. S. Steel Common had bounced back to 100 with Mr. Roosevelt's permission.

But shux! George Parsons of the Leafs mousetrapped the Bruins five-man attack just 5:02 after the opening of the third, and Pep Kelly sneaked in for the rebound. It was one of those unexpected kiss-me-quicks which you don't expect until the little lipstick light is lit and there you are with a smear on your puss.

So things went on pretty waspishly with the boys giving each other the old Second Ward stuff and some times stopping to massage each other's windpipes or comb their hair with a club butt. And about there a slight case of Christmas came to the Bruins.

RELIABLE EDDIE

Still, they might just as well have spared their larynxes. Because at exactly 10:02, Sudden Death time, Toronto cut down the old pine tree and hauled it a way to the mill on a quadruple play, Apps to Drillon to home and mother.

But pshaw! Folks, the score twern't nawthin' to the epic kind of game which we like to think of as typical of these vernal, gold-banner classics.

Eddie Shore was still the darling of the press coop, quick to hog another man's fight and always dipping into the Leafs like a kid in his Grandmaw's pickle jar. It was a sight for the eyes to see him sock his thick stern into the oncoming horde and bend their fenders. Some fun for a man verging 35 who had a busted vertebra this time last year.

SEASON OVER

But today is Wednesday and the Bruins rubbing room crew are spraying the team's woolens with moth control, smearing their skates with vaseline and storing the property trunks in the cellar.

The Fenway forsythia is growing fat with brown buds. The crocus blossoms are poking up. The brownbird is a-twitter on a twig. Spring's warm winds are blowing up the seaboard. And already winter and stale thoughts of the Stanley Cup are one with a dead season.

Walpole Boy, 19, Rolls 366 To Lead in Men's Singles

Mother of Nine Also Stars in Bowling Tourney

A big feature of the third day of the Boston Evening American Sunday Advertiser tournament at the Huntington Club alleys was the bowling of Mrs. Richard Russell, 24 [illegible] street, Brighton, the mother of nine children, three of whom are of voting age.

Mrs. Russell, paired with her nephew, Lawrence O'Callaghan, rolled three strings in the mixed doubles for a pinfall of 274, an average of 91.

Five years ago Mrs. Russell took up bowling at the time being afflicted with nervous prostration. She says her entire recovery to the sport.

In the three years of the American-Advertiser tourney she has never missed taking part, and says she gets a whole lot of fun out of it.

[illegible] records went flying in many of the events. First [illegible] the lead was Fred Orlando, Walpole, in the men's singles when he connected for a total of 366, [illegible] string netting him the highest single string of the tournament.

NEW TEAM MARK

Orlando is only 19 years of age and has been bowling three years. The style in which he slewed off strikes and spares should mean that he will soon be classed with the leading candlepin artists of the country.

A couple from the Old Timers' League, Henry McLean and Edward MacCormack, of the South Station alleys marched off to the tune of 699 in the men's doubles to set up a new mark by a good [illegible]

[illegible] This score was [illegible] inasmuch as the members of the team have been bowling [illegible] pins all of the season.

GRAVES LEADS BOYS

The Hyde Square Five is the tops in the women's teams with their 1425, while V. L. Palickas, Brockton, is setting the pace in the college men's singles with 256.

The youngest to take part in the tournament is John Stevenson, Jr., only nine years of age. He did his part in the boys' singles and connected for 217 pins.

His aim was very good, but lack of strength caused him to lose several spares. The pins did a neat song and dance, but remained standing.

There is an excellent program listed for today, many of the sharpshooters getting into action, both in the amateur and open classes.

• • •

It's a great get together for the leading bowlers of New England. Greetings, hand clasps and exchange of alley news and stories spice the daily routine at the Huntington Club. Alley owners and promoters are evidently using the tournament for their appointments.

• • •

Bill Sands, of the Commonwealth, believes his representatives will bring home a goodly slice of the bacon in trophies . . . Bill Downing, the Quincy promoter, declares the American-Advertiser is doing wonderful work for bowling. He lays the remarkable increase in bowling the past few years to the publicity given in the tournaments previously held, and says the present one is the best of them all.

• • •

Jim Curry stopped to say that Eddie Snodgrass, supervisor and instructor at the 20th Century Club has returned from viewing the highlights of New York, and that Eddie and Mrs. Snodgrass were given a grand sendoff on their silver wedding anniversary.

• • •

Lou Hamilton was in the thick of the talk-fests, and wondering why she was barred from taking part in the men's open singles. "Afraid I'd beat the men," was her conclusion . . . Polly Van Ness drew a big crowd from Framingham. The pins and breaks were against her, but she still holds the world girls' high school record.

• • •

Jack Waldman couldn't keep away from the tournament, though his mind is on the championship pocket billiard tourney at his Olympia. He says the fine work of A. D MacDonald, the Maine cue champion, and Raymond Gaye, Jamaica Plain, is a big surprise to the fans, who expected Johnny Mills, the defending champion, to sweep aside all opposition handily.

Joe Grant has a new pupil in Walt Kiley, daily lessons being the rule. So apt has been Walt that he is making the old master hustle to win the odd strings . . . Saturday is Haverhill Day, and a big crowd is coming to root and bowl.

Title Mat Bout At Arena Tonight

Paul Adams and Sandy McDonald, both claimants of the wrestling light heavyweight championship, will make an effort to decide which is the better man when they tangle at the Arena tonight.

Several weeks ago Art O'Mahoney was signed to meet Adams, and was injured the first few minutes of the bout. In order not to disappoint the fans, Adams agreed to take on a substitute. Sandy McDonald was selected.

He immediately went to work, scoring a decisive victory over the Georgia boy. However, Adams claims Sandy did not win the title for the simple reason that it was not at stake. He claims it was an exhibition match.

So tonight is the night that will decide who is the light heavyweight champion, and the winner will be recognised as such by the U. S. W. A.

O'Mahoney would like another chance at the championship and if he scores a victory over the South Boston grappler tonight, he is very apt to get it.

Harvard to Swim In A. A. U. Meet

Harvard's varsity swimming team will close its season on April 8 and 9 with the A. A. U. meet in the Ohio State University pool. Seven swimmers have been selected by Coach Hal Ulen to compete.

Last week-end Harvard placed third behind Michigan and Ohio State in the annual N. C. A. A. meeting which a disqualification in the medley relay event cost the Crimson tankmen a chance to win the first national title.

Those who will make the trip are Hutter, Bill Kendall, Jim Curwen, Harley Stowell, Graham Cummin, Dario Berizzi and Captain-elect Russ Greenhood. Hutter is the present 220-yard N. A. A. U. record holder and Kendall is expected to be crowned champ in the 440-yard grind. The Crimson freestyle and medley relays will also compete in the season's finale.

Watertown Coach Keeps Boys Loose With Wisecracks During Practice

O'Brien Is Smart 'Un As Team Record Proves

After watching Tom O'Brien put his Watertown baseball forces through a stiff workout it isn't difficult to understand why that school annually turns out a crack nine.

In the first place, Coach O'Brien, a former athletic great himself and a gentleman with a delightful personality, makes his practice drills as interesting and entertaining as possible.

"No wonder they wrote that song, 'Lazy Bones.'" Or then again, he might come forward with "Yes, he looks like the Old Man of the Mountains."

In the event that Moore is not ready, West will be sent to right field and Fletcher will return to the initial sack.

The Bees hope to be able to field the strongest club they have sent against the Red Sox. Moore and English were out of the other Red Sox game. With them back, the Bees will be at war strength.

NIGGELING WINS

The Bees held a field day yesterday against Louisville Colonels who beat the Boston Red Sox in both ends of a home and home series, winning by a margin of 9 to 1.

Ray Mueller, Deb Garms and Gilly English featured at the bat for the Stengelmen.

Johnny Niggeling, after a shaky start, held the Colonels to four hits, two of which were very scratchy. Then Frank Gabler hurled two scoreless innings.

Up goes his foot and away goes a blazing fast ball. Yes, sir, that's just about the way Watertown's ace hurler, Frank "Lefty" McHugh, will throw them this spring.

Offered 100-20 on Bruins

By MURRAY KRAMER

In fact, the gambling element which had figured that the series couldn't end in three games offered 100 to 20 that the Bruins would win. What a licking they took.

How those boys belted each other for the first ten minutes. Eddie Shore sent four of the first six in the cooler. Ag Smith and Bert McCaffery, however, called five quick penalties, and from then on the boys attended to their knitting.

The Garden was a tough spot for a weak hearted gent when the Bruins scored. The fans had one inch salutes in addition to the bells and whatnot.

Among the few Toronto rooters who came down was an undertaker. He stayed to see the Bruins interred.

Happiest gents in the Leafs dressing room were King Clancy and Charley Conacher. Remember

All was quiet in the Bruins dressing room. The boys were really depressed. There was nary an alibi. There shouldn't have been, for each of the players had a half dozen opportunities but just didn't connect.

How the crowd loves a winner! The fans waited outside the Leafs quarters for autographs. Photographers and newspapermen rushed to congratulate the Maple Leafs. What a spot for the vociferous Connie Smythe. But Connie disappoints. He even refuses to predict that his Leafs will win the Stanley Cup.

That anticipated blood and thunder hockey did not materialize. Sporting a two game advantage the Leafs played conservative hockey all night and just waited for the breaks.

Gambling brought the Bruins great success all year, but when they wanted victory most the wheel spun the other way.

"Where to now," Tiny Thompson was asked. "Home, I guess," mournfully replied Tiny, "though I didn't believe it would be this soon."

Those hockey players have plenty of what it takes but those fans who sit around the rim of the rink have just as much. A wild puck knocked the hat right off a winsome young lady. An inch lower and there might have been a headache.

The number one hockey player in the league for our money is Mr. Cecil Dillon, a cagey gent who loafs a lot but clicks reservantly when opportunity presents itself.

All year it has been said that Toronto would be a great team if it had a goalie. But if a gentleman ever rose to heights during the short series it was Turk Broda.

Newest system in betting on hockey is to figure the winner mathematically and then bet on the other team. After seeing the Bruins drop three straight and reading about the achievements of the Americans and Blackhawks—anything can happen in this man-sized game.

Casey Runs Out On Robert at Worcester

Worcester, March 30.—Steve "Crusher" Casey, world's heavyweight wrestling champion, lost a lot of prestige here when he refused to wrestle the Masked Marvel, who proved to be Yvon Robert, [illegible]

Casey was paired with Marvin Westenberg of Tacoma, Wash., for the top battle at Mechanics hall. The latter failed to show up when time for the main event came. A [illegible] stepped into the ring opposite Casey and was introduced as the Masked Marvel, who would substitute for Westenberg.

Referee [illegible] called both wrestlers to the center of the ring to give them instructions. Casey immediately threw out his right hand, yanked the mask off and discovered his opponent as Robert. Just as quickly Casey turned on his heels and walked out of the ring. "Casey came here to wrestle Westenberg and not Robert," Jack Albright, manager of the champion, announced from the ring, all the while he was motioning Casey to retreat to his dressing room.

Meanwhile, Eddie Quinn, manager of Robert, leaped into the ring, hoisted his right hand, addressed the crowd and said Casey has been telling everybody about how he has been challenging Robert for the last 18 months since he has been in this country and has had at least 18 times to wrestle him, but each time Albright has maneuvered him out of it.

Casey went on to defeat Westenberg in straight falls after a spirited battle, but there are those among Worcester fans who believe that there was enough business about Robert to have lowered the Irish colors of Casey had not he made his famous retreat.

200 Amateurs in Title Battles

Hawaiian Team Training Here

By JACK CONWAY

TOM KANALY, who has charge of the entries for the national amateur boxing championships that will be held at the Garden on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings of next week, looks for the most brilliant simon pure show staged here since the Hearst All-America battles.

Mr. Boston

"There will be more than 200 boxers competing in the eight championship classes," said Tom.

I asked Kanaly how it would be possible for him to ever get through his trial contests on Monday.

"We have solved that problem," was the quick reply. "The boxers will be examined at 10 o'clock on Monday morning, and by 3 o'clock in the afternoon they will be tossing punches.

"One ring will be set up in the Garden, while there will be two rings in the Exposition Hall that is part of the Garden. We decided against two rings in the Garden as we felt that such a plan often confuses the fans.

"There will be seats in the Exposition Hall for those fans who wish to witness the bouts there. When a boxer shows top form in his first trial bout, we shall have him appear in the Garden ring for his second trial.

"This system will enable us to run off 15 bouts an hour, and the show should be over before midnight Monday. This will be more humane for both the boxers and the spectators. When an amateur boxing show lasts until three or four o'clock in the morning the spectators take as much punishment as the boxers."

I asked Tom how many States will be represented in the coming tournament.

"There will be boxers from 17 States throwing punches," declared Kanaly. "Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, North Carolina, South Carolina, Illinois, Michigan, Nebraska, New Hampshire, Ohio, New York, California, Louisiana, Texas, Virginia, Oklahoma, Utah, Missouri, the District of Columbia, and Hawaii will have teams in the title show.

"There will be numerous college boxers among those who will compete. There is Mitchell Walton of Wilberforce University of Wilberforce, O., in the 118-pound division; Claude Mason of Centenary College of Shreveport, La., in the 175-pound class, and Bill Brittin of Pacific University, Forest Grove, Ore., in the heavyweight group."

Salvatore Bartollo Bids for Title

SALVATORE Bartolo of East Boston, one of the classiest boxers and sharpest punchers to blaze his way into professional boxing during the past year, goes [illegible] with Tony Dupre of Manchester, N. H., for the New England featherweight championship at the Arena on Monday night.

Bartolo is a graduate of the Hearst All-America ring tournament. I considered him one of the best [illegible] prospects to take part in the All-America battles.

As an amateur [illegible] even more promising than [illegible] Martin of the South End, who [illegible] second victory over Ralph Zire [illegible] in Providence the other night.

Bartolo [illegible] fight at 118 pounds as an amateur. Since entering the professional ranks the East Boston youngster has put on weight and now [illegible] 126 pounds.

Bartolo has won his last three starts, defeating Sammy [illegible], Tony Costa and Eddie Haas. Each of these was a hard bout with Bartolo's boxing class and fast punching gaining him the decisions.

Dupre won the New England featherweight championship when he outscored Joey Archibald at Eddie Mack's Egleston A. C. Dupre is a wide open puncher and top boxer. As champion he will probably go to the post a slight favorite over Bartollo.

The $[illegible] gate at the Martin-Zanelli bout in Providence proved there is plenty of interest in boxing if the fans are offered the proper kind of attractions. The Bartolo-Dupre go is a good attraction and it should interest those fans who see a turn as they wait for the opening of the A. A. U. championships on Monday night.

The Star Spangled forces got off on the wrong foot as they have a penchant for doing and were a goal down before the game was six minutes old.

It looked as though the Hawks were going to retain the advantage [illegible] as the [illegible] the opening period and the middle frame [illegible] the final minutes.

People Have Mistaken Idea Concerning Slump

By LEWIS HANEY

Professor of Economics, New York University

Special to Boston Evening American

NEW YORK, March 30—A good many people have been telling me of their fear that a so-called "vicious spiral of deflation" may be setting in. Such people do not see how there can be any bottom unless "something is done." They seem to think that depressions would go on forever unless some stimulus, accidental or planned, were provided.

To my mind, this is a mistaken idea. Furthermore, it is dangerous, because it is apt to lead to government "pump-priming" of one sort or another, which either prolongs the depression or rushes us into a short-lived boom such as the 1936-37 affair.

Given half a chance, business will recover from depression automatically, much as a man will recover from indigeston or intoxication. Always, the chief requirement is the existence of a chance for business men to make money.

* * *

To begin with, depressions are made in boom times. At the peak of a boom, economic maladjustments arise. Consumers overspend on the instalment plan. Producers make more goods than consumers can pay for within any normal time. Unfilled orders are abnormally large. Raw material prices are bid up. Wages are high. Inventories accumulate.

Then comes a realization of the maladjustment, and a period of "correction" sets in. We call it a "recession." It is required to readjust prices, and to liquidate excessive inventories and overextended credits. But it gathers momentum, and usually carries beyond a mere restoration of normal conditions.

Then, what I have called "negative maladjustments" arise. Inventories become too low in some cases. Prices of raw materials fall below their usual relation to prices of finished goods. Laborers become willing to accept lower wages. Strained credit positions are relieved by "reorganizations."

But these "negative maladjustments" are just chances to make money. They mean that some things are "too low" and therefore are bargains.

Then bargain hunters appear and begin to buy. This is the business self-starter. It insures automatic recovery from depression.

Where there is life, there is hope!

* * *

Once the price maladjustments that mark the boom are corrected, two conditions arise: (1) The basis for buying and selling is restored by normal price relationships. Prices look "right," and exchanges begin to occur. (2) Investment demand arises, and both commodities and securities are bought to hold, because they are recognized as bargains.

At the same time, living costs come down, so labor can live better on lower money wage rates. Then employers can afford to hire more labor, and employment and payrolls begin to rise.

Most emphatically, the "vicious spiral of deflation" is a myth. It is nothing but the reverse of the vicious spiral of inflation, and it stops automatically.

It is nonsense to think that as prices go down buyers will refuse to buy forever. It is melancholia to suppose that because unemployment reduces spending, therefore more unemployment and more reductions in spending will become perpetual.

The answer is that as soon as things get cheap and inventories begin to decline, somebody will buy. Then others will buy. Then increased production and employment are required.

What will these buyers use for money? Why, there are dozens of answers. First, we always find many shrewd and cautious people who have reserves. Saving grows in a recession. Second, credit becomes liquid and good. As soon as things are cheap, and shrewd people want to buy, there will be no trouble in borrowing. Real production is now certain, and real production is the only way to get real money to spend.

But remember, the business self-starter won't turn over unless the government allows business men a chance to earn and retain profits.

Western Banker Scores Branch Banking Methods

By MERRYLE STANLEY RUKEYSER

International News Service Financial Writer

IN THE WEST, March 30—As in other parts of the country, California bankers are vigorously debating questions related to group and branch banking.

Unit bankers out here by no means put the same favorable stamp on proposals to extend branch banking as A. P. Giannini, chairman of the Bank of America and father of state-wide branch banking, whose views were recently presented in this column.

OTHER SIDE OF QUESTION

The head of a bank in Los Angeles, setting forth the other side of the question, told me:

"I do not believe bank holding companies are for the best interests of either banking or the public.

"I do not believe that either far-flung branch banking or chain banking is desirable. I think branches within a city or within a certain specified prescribed area are desirable."

Asked whether he thought banks ought to depend still more on service charges for their net income, this financier added:

"There should be a distinction between services that follow deposit relationship (in other words, the ordinary handling of an account in the regular course of business) and other services. There should be included under analysis the deposit relationship costs, and for other services a full, separate charge should be made. By other services, I mean escrow, credit reports, and so on. Deposit insurance should be taken into consideration when considering costs."

There is some opposition from the bankers to the recent suggestion by a Detroit financier that banks should pass along the cost of deposit insurance directly to their depositors. Those in opposition say that the federal provision against interest on demand deposits was intended to offset for banks the outlay for deposit insurance.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

In Southern California, bankers see no inability of borrowers to meet their obligations since the slump started, though some borrowers are slower and there is widespread talk of payments on instalment paper slowing up.

Asked what proportion of bank resources may be safely invested in long term bonds, a bank president in Los Angeles said: "Not more than one-half of the real savings accounts, exclusive of the extraordinarily large sums which may be in savings accounts awaiting investment."

A chief executive of a bank, with his finger on the pulse of business sentiment in this section, said:

"Our customers believe, I think, that the business outlook depends upon constructive legislation which should be passed and upon policies of the national government.

"The busines man out here is just waiting, indicating an inability to foresee trends."

Whitney's Kin Knew Little

NEW YORK, March 29 (AP)—Richard Whitney, bankrupt Wall Street branker, testified today that his brother, George Whitney, a partner in J. P. Morgan & Co., knew he had been using securities of the New York Stock Exchange Gratuity Fund improperly and was "terribly disturbed" by that knowledge.

"Did your brother know what securities had been used improperly?" he was asked.

"He knew only about the stock exchange gratuity fund," Whitney replied. "So far as I know, he knew nothing about the rest until it all became public."

Whitney appeared tired and worn and frequently showed signs of petulance as he answered questions in bankruptcy proceedings before Referee Irwin Kurtz—one of the final steps in clearing up the maze of his financial difficulties before he is sentenced on his guilty pleas to two indictments charging grand larceny.

B. & O. to Pay Interest

NEW YORK, March 30 (INS)—The Baltimore & Ohio R. R. today notified the N. Y. Stock Exchange that it will pay interest due April 1 on its $81,994,850 of 4s, its $75,000,000 of 5s, both of 1948, and the $45,350,000 of 3 per cent bonds of the Chicago & Alton, a subsidiary. Total semi-annual charges are around $4,500,000.

Walsh Shoe Co. Adds 'Charm Step' Line

Culminating years of research, the Walsh Shoe Store on Chauncey street today announced the introduction of a new line of women's shoes to be known as "Charm Step."

The store has established a new department for the "Charm Step" shoes, which were developed by William Walsh, Jr. He will personally supervise presentation of them to clients of the store.

Mr. Walsh consulted nationally-known stylists, pattern designers and manufacturers of fine shoes before the final creation of the "Charm Step" line. Hundreds of models were tested and discarded before the one desired was developed.

Forty years of experience in retailing footwear, gained by Mr. Walsh, Sr., was enlisted in the designing. Made of materials usually found only in high priced shoes, the "Charm Step" models include daytime, evening and sports fashions. They are found in gabardine, calf, kid and buckskin, with all types of heels.

Seize 4 Carloads Of Unfit Food Here

Four carloads of celery, spinach and chicory, found unfit for human consumption, were ordered confiscated and destroyed by food inspectors from the health department at the New Haven Terminal docks on Northern avenue today.

The foodstuffs were to be transferred to scows and dumped at sea. They came to Boston from the South, Inspector John Linehan stataed. The seizure was the largest here in some time.

Dinner Planned By Hebrew Free Loan Society

With leaders in civic and city life present, the Hebrew Free Loan Society of Boston will observe its 25th anniversary Sunday night at a banquet at Hotel Touraine.

The organization was founded "for the purpose of assisting those who need temporary financial assistance and to help promote good will among the various groups of the community."

Judge Abraham E. Pinanski of Superior Court is presidetn of the society. Commenting on the organization's quarter of a century of public service, Judge Pinanski declared:

"They had vision and built on solid foundation—the small group of men who 25 years ago brought into existence the Hebrew Free Loan Society of Boston.

"Friendly, constructive Community work, helping deserving people to help themselves, was their goal and with that in mind, they designed their edifice.

"They know that timely assistance given to those in need of financial help enabled the latter to preserve their self-respect and self-dependence. They know that small loans, without interest or other charge, made to deserving applicants irrespective of race, color or creed, frequently made it possible for such borrowers to escape the necessity of accepting public charity."

Judge Pinanski is general chairman of the anniversary committee. Others include Abraham S. Guterman, Matthew Porosky, Jacob Daniels, Samuel Pinanski, Max E. Bernkopf and Julius Meyer.

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN

WEDNESDAY,
MARCH 30, 1938

✝ For our conversation is in Heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour,he Lord Jesus Christ.—Phillipians III., 20. ✝

The text for today is suggested by the Rev. Marshal Jenkins, Union Church, Watertown. The next text will be suggested the Rev. William Macnair, Congregational Church, Cambridge.

The Editor Says:

"The way to defend the United States of America from attack in ANY form by ANY hostile power is with airplanes."
—William Randolph Hearst.

MR. HEARST, in his Sunday editorial read by millions who desire peace, showed America a SURE AND CHEAP way to peace.

Build the greatest and most effective air force in the world and BE SAFE.

America is in the midst of a world in which war is MADE BY and is the CHOICE OF aggressors who take what they can from WHOM they can.

Thus there will likely be only two kinds of peaceful nations in the future, the CONQUERED and the UNCONQUERABLE.

Let us make a choice while there IS a choice.

Captain Eddie Rickenbacker, America's premier flying ace in the World War, wrote recently in the Hearst newspapers that America will be unnecessarily RISKING WAR if it does not have THIRTY THOUSAND military and commercial planes available by the end of this year.

He also wrote that:

"FOR THE SAKE OF PEACE, we must at once develop 100,000 fully-trained, unsurpassed pilots."

As marvelous a machine as the airplane is, it is no better or more effective than the brain and skill of its pilot.

MR. HEARST advocates both PLANES AND MEN in the quantities required to SPARE AMERICA THE RAVAGES OF WAR and to GIVE US VICTORY in whatever future war may be imposed upon us.

Only if we are prepared to WIN ANY WAR IN THE AIR can we give our people assurance of the permanent peace and security they desire.

Let the first step be, as Captain Rickenbacker urges, the training of 100,000 PILOTS FOR PEACE.

STREAMLINED PINCE-NEZ

"Spectacles that fold like accordions and streamlined pince-nez were discussed at the conference of the New England Council of Optometrists."—News Item.

Everything has been streamlined. Not even the bathtub and kitchen stove have escaped. Consequently it is only logical that eyeglasses should be included.

But streamlined pince-nez! What are they? Well, according to the optometrists, they are wondrous gadgets that catch the light and produce a rainbow effect.

However, we are not so enthusiastic as we ought to be. Tucked away in our mind is the memory of the spinster who guided our destiny in grammar school. She wore pince-nez, and what pince-nez!

On the very tip of her nose they sat with the assurance of the Empire State Building, and from them was draped an immense and thoroughly useless black ribbon.

When those pince-nez came off and were pointed in your direction, you saw colors that no streamlined lens will ever reveal. In fact, you almost saw your own heart beating in your mouth.

A MOTHER'S SACRIFICE

—Boston Evening American.

Few men will understand the supreme devotion which enables a mother to permit the amputation of her ear; that knowledge is the exclusive possession of women who have had children.

This Everett mother must now go through life with only one ear. Yet she is happy to have been able to make the sacrifice. The fact that her boy will look like other boys is satisfaction enough for her.

Somehow, after reading about this convincing proof of mother love, the world seems brighter, better, more hopeful. Our quarrels, personal, national and international, undoubtedly will continue. But that most important of relationships, the tie that binds mother and child, remains strong and enduring.

No wonder poets and thinkers of all ages honored mothers. They are the rays of heaven in this unheavenly world.

NO SNOOPERS WANTED

"Prediction of wide-scale snooping among Massachusetts citizens to aid enforcement of the proposed 2 per cent retail sales tax confounded the legislation's proponents."—News Item.

The State House reporter gives us abundant food for thought. Meddlers and peepers will surely find the Bay State a paradise if the sales tax nightmare becomes law.

If Mrs. Jones, seeking to save money, goes to New Hampshire or some other tax-free State and buys a refrigerator or even a house dress, she will be walking into trouble.

Mrs. X, the busy-body next door, will have only to report Mrs. Jones to the authorities. They will do the rest.

Massachusetts does not want such laws. What is more, our people will not tolerate them. There was enough snooping during Prohibition to last a lifetime.

Clip That Creeper

By Nelson Hardin

Two United States Senators have protested that bureaucrats at Washington have "blacklisted" them because, in the performance of their public duties, they saw fit to oppose Administration measures.

In fact, the power that spreading bureaucracy now wields in the Government is monstrous, and it is bound to grow worse as bureaucracy grows steadily bigger.

There are now approximately 140 bureaus in the Federal Government, and the peace-time civil service now approaches 900,000 jobholders—more than the World War emergencies required.

With bureaucrats lobbying, granting favors, withholding or dispensing funds, and exercising political pressure and reprisal, Congress is being subjugated by its own creatures.

The Voice of New York

By
Louis Sobol

CASUAL COMMENT: Casey, the Original, who "struck out," is now 76 and lives quietly in Maryland . . . To Jack Miley, who is preparing a magazine piece about him, he said: "No matter what anyone tells you—I did strike out" . . . And I always thought Casey was a myth . . . No one is a more enthusiastic patron at the larger cabaret shows than former Ambassador James W. Gerard . . . I have almost a dozen cigarette cases of assorted shapes and sizes, but never carry them because they bulge coat or hip pockets . . . Saw William Gaxton the other night pluck his elaborate gold case from the 'kerchief pocket of his jacket . . . Never thought of that—it solves my problem . . . Eddie Davis' innocent expression, as he chants compositions not intended for the kiddies, slowly recedes to sly understanding as his audience starts to giggle . . . It explains the fellow's amazing hold on his fans . . .

For years a weekly feature of this department, when it concerned itself chiefly with Broadway, was a column labelled, "Diary of a Columnist's Pup," purporting to be the intimate revelations of our wire-haired, Whiskey.

When the scope and format of the column was changed recently, I dropped Whiskey's babblings because I was not certain it would appeal to numerous new readers added when this daily piece was placed in most of the key cities from coast to coast.

Some day this week, however, I am planning to experiment with the Pup's Diary again—and its appearance in the space thereafter will depend upon the readers' reaction.

What a hot tune "Mississippi" was in its day! Only the other night, in a song-guessing game in which dates must be mentioned, there were brought to mind the No. 1 songs of other days. "I Love My Wife—But O, You Kid" (1919) . . . "Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly?" introduced by Nora Bayes in 1914 . . . "I'm Afraid to Go Home in the Dark" (1917) . . . "Under the Bamboo Tree" (introduced by Marie Cahill in 1912) . . . "My Pony Boy" (1909) . . . "Call Me Up Some Rainy Afternoon" (1910) . . . "My Wife's Gone to the Country" (1909) . . . "Yaaka Hula Hickey Dula" (introduced by Jolson in 1916) . . .

The night (or afternoon) some orchestra composed of gentlemanly musicians will assemble these old tunes and play them over the air, I promise to sit by the radio and listen through to the sweet end . . . Years from now, of course, nostalgia-bitten commentators will yelp loudly for a revival of "Dipsey Doodle," "Rosalie" and "Beir Mir Bist Du Schoen" . . .

Quentin Reynolds, who interviewed William Powell recently, commiserated with the star over the operation he was to undergo at the time. Powell said: "I really shouldn't worry, I suppose, because my doctor keeps telling me it will be a clean cut. Over and over again, he keeps assuring me it's nothing—it will be such a clean cut."

Memory Jots: Douglas Fairbanks spent three weeks selling soap. There never was any mystery connected with this position. He sold no soap. No soap—no salary . . . Novelist-Author's Agent Will Lengel was a referee only once in his life—accidentally. He officiated at the impromptu two-blow fight between Kid Sinclair Lewis and Battling Theodore Dreiser . . .

Epitaph for a Columnist:
A gifted marksman drew a bead.

The Marry-Go-Round

All that a man asks of a woman is that she love him a little, trust him a lot—AND LET HIM ALONE!

Every man wants a wife like his watch; always around when she is wanted and never in the way when she isn't wanted. A non-interfering wife!

You know the kind I mean! A wife whose chatter won't interfere with the reading of his newspaper at breakfast and whose love of an argument won't interfere with his digestion at dinner.

Human Side of the News

A MUMMY rides over the roof of the world, with many millions breathlessly concerned. The rider is the Panchen Lama, who was the spiritual ruler of Tibet, and who died last November in western China.

He is carried on a palanquin, sitting upright, with a chanting procession of monks toiling over the high, wind-blown, snow-swept mountain passes into Tibet. Their progress is blocked by the followers of the Dalai Lama, temporal ruler, who died in 1933.

The Panchen Lama had been exiled for many years. His return is opposed, even when he returns only to a grave. The Dalai Lama was the thirteenth head of the Buddhist faith, and the Buddhists and their scriptures decree that the thirteenth Dalai Lama should be the last. But they allowed the succession to revert to the Panchen Lama. Followers of the latter search the mountain wilderness for a child bearing the stigmata which will proclaim his divinity.

There is a stir, a rallying, treks through the mountain fastnesses, uneasiness and boding. For this divided spiritual and temporal dynasty represents leadership over a vastly greater number of human beings than that of Christianity. There are 500,000,000 Buddhists on this earth of ours.

Outer Mongolia and Tibet constitute a territory larger than the United States, rich in mineral wealth and grazing lands, still knowing only a primitive nomadic culture. With Colonel Younghusband, England penetrated it first among the Western powers, and her sagacious scouts of empire have been there ever since, chanting and genuflecting with the devotees, gently easing the ancient hierarchy into the zone of benign British influence, and reporting to Downing Street. And so have the missionaries of Russia, Japan and France.

There is a tense, wary, slippery offstage grapple for power there, in the Laocoon struggle for world domination. Conforming to their ancient religion, neither the Dalai nor Panchen Lamas allowed any delving in the earth for gold or oil.

Which of the powers will succeed in landing their man as the new Lama and which will get first access to the great mineral resources of Tibet? The mummy riding the roof of the world declines to answer.

We of the common herd have taken calmly the upheavals and changes of modern times.

We have gazed with pain and horror at utterly fantastic women's hats as we strolled in our crowded streets, and still retained our sanity.

When women bobbed their hair, we were quietly submissive. Meekly we accept whatever design the automotive engineers or the tailors decree for us. We submit tamely to the new five-suit bridge deck. We raise no outcry when a third party looms in the political arena. Even talk of a five-base baseball diamond has found us calm.

But there is a limit. Those uneasy arbiters of our destiny, who never let well enough alone, are warned that there will be trouble if they keep on with this new five-suit poker deck. They would have five aces beat a straight flush.

When this happens, our immemorial liberties will have gone the way of deuces wild, the one-eyed jack and spit-in-the-ocean. The institution of one hundred per cent old-line American poker has long been the esoteric treasure, the haven of free masculine spirits, the bulwark of our domestic liberties.

Slow, corrosive, change assails us everywhere. But here we mount the barricades. Up and at 'em, men!

The Political Parade

WASHINGTON, March 30.

A CERTAIN group of Senators regards the Japanese quest of oil in Mexico as a political development of unusual importance.

It has resulted in an opinion on the part of some Senators that the time has come for the United States to purchase the whole of Lower California from Mexico.

He has now been asked to reintroduce this bill. He has the matter under consideration, but has given no answer.

Word from Tokyo that the Japanese government was negotiating with Mexico for a contract for 500,000 barrels of Mexican oil annually led to the suspicion that there was more than mere coincidence in the incident.

Japan was so alert to enter the Mexican market as to lead to the suspicion that there was an understanding between the Mexican and Japanese governments prior to the nationalization by Mexico of all American oil properties in that country.

There is apprehension that Japanese development of the Mexican oil fields will result in a large emigration of Japanese to Mexico.

One Senator said in private conversation that the internal conditions in Mexico might easily become such as to require Japan—from her point of view—to land marines on the West Coast to protect her oil interests. And that would present a grave problem to the United States.

The Japanese offer for oil contracts follows closely upon highly circumstantial reports that Japan has received on the West Coast certain valuable mineral concessions, which have been under lease for many years to an American steel company.

It also follows not long after Mexico's sensational increase in tariff duties against the United States, announced two months ago.

Some members are around so seldom that the doorkeepers don't get to know them all.

The other day when Gomer Smith, of Oklahoma, walked into the House to deliver his high-light speech on poor Old Doc Townsend, a gentleman followed him in, and took a seat on the Democratic side.

Then he moved over to the Republican side, sat down, and followed the debate for an hour. Somebody thought he looked a little strange, but nobody was sure. Finally Doorkeeper Farley went up and asked him if he was a member of the House.

March of Events

SECRETLY and silently there is jubilation in the breasts of one people at least over the fate of Austria.

That people are the Serbians.

Austria began the World War in 1914 when, rejecting all of Serbia's nearly 100 per cent concessions to Austria's demands, she declared war and marched on Belgrade, the capital of Serbia.

I return again, still fascinated, to the amazing case of Eunice Goody Cole, of Hampton, N. H.

Eunice was sentenced in 1656 to ten years in jail for "witchcraft." When she got out of jail the townsfolk nagged her into her grave.

But before this poor soul, a victim of superstition at its deadliest, could be put into a grave they pierced her body with a spike that was mounted on a horseshoe so that the devil could not possess her.

Now there is a Goody Cole Society in Hampton, the accusations have been publicly burned and dirt from her grave has been piously buried in a cemetery.

If mankind could only project its conscience into the future instead of wasting it on the past, the world would take some of the wrinkles out of its brow and its heart would echo the song of the lark rather than the howl of the wolf.

What is "liberalism" as it is defined today?

The best answer to this question comes to "March of Events" from a reader in Seattle, who says:

"Liberalism is now a device to pluck the successful and peel the well-to-do by taxes and hand the booty over to bureaucratic politicians and their field workers."

Professional "liberalism," which originally meant the attempt to create a balance between reactionary Toryism and collectivistic doctrines, is now nothing but a mask for State Socialism and Communism.
